In The Art of Arranging Silk Flowers, surely the loveliest fabric flower arrangement book ever to be published, Robba shares his inspired design sense which always takes its cues from nature – its harmonious color combinations, the subtleties of the blooming process, its imperfections, and its simple beauty.

Each time the experience has been extremely positive. He created a beautiful colorful wildflower arrangement for our condo last year, and everyone who sees it admires it and thinks the flowers are real. I have purchased several silk plants from him as well, and just like the floral arrangement, everyone thinks the plants are real. The quality of the products in the shop and the talent and professionalism of Mark will keep me returning to the Art of Artificial for years to come. His shop is gorgeous and I guarantee you will leave a very happy customer. Store hours during the week are advertised as Left work early to get there by 4: Store is locked, ringing the door bell does nothing. No note indicating why nobody is there. Mark is extremely talented, I absolutely love his creations, his natural talent is exceptional. He is extremely consultative and will work within your budget to create master pieces. His shop is gorgeous but he will also come to your home and help decorate. He is like no other! Love him and Bentley so much!!! Looking for a touch of Fall? Need a lovely orchid spray for a special vase? Does your house need more touches of green? This is the place to go for all of that and more. The owner, Mark, carries a wide variety of artificial silk flowers and plants to help add warmth and color to your home. I am always pleased and surprised by new additions that he brings into his store. He is helpful with suggestions and ideas to help create the look you are wanting to achieve. Do yourself a favor and visit "Silk". What better than getting your silk trees in person rather than taking a chance ordering on line. Mark and Bridget solved my dilemma. We are so pleased with the quality. So glad I found their shop. I fell in love with a succulent arrangement too. We plan to go back and pick out a silk orchid arrangement. Lots of nice things in the shop too I have my eye on a decorative vase or two. Go in and browse. High quality, Highly recommended. This is the first time I have visited this business, and have to say I was very surprised. There was a huge selection of various plants and arrangements that looked sooo real. You would swear they were not fake. So we bought 4 artificial plants here over the weekend, 2 large plants and 2 medium. We are very very happy with our purchase! And will go back again. Mark the owner gave us a good deal on our purchase of 4 plants and keep the humor coming with his own funny and witty sense of sarcasim. I came here in a panic! I was getting married in two days and I still did not have my bouquet. I knew exactly what wanted; something very simple and elegant. Probably thinking I was crazy, Mark stopped what he was doing and brought my vision to life in a matter of minutes! I walked in here feeling so stressed, but thanks to Mark I walked out with my bouquet! And I got so many comments on how beautiful and unique it was! I have purchased two silk trees from this business. One I bought straight off the floor as it was just what I needed and the second one they made for me to fit a ficus in a certain size space. This place is awesome! That was how I thought of it until I walked into this place and met Mark. Then he proceeded to show me just how wrong that thinking was. I now have his arrangements all over my apartment and I love them. No more dead plants for me! Mark is a genius with flowers! His staff there are great too. So check this place out! Neither can Man Candy. This proves a problem, given that he keeps buying and killing them. Today, the problem has been solved. The guy working was really helpful, very nice. Suggested a ton of different things when we mentioned we wanted orchids. Anyway, the place is super hard to get to. You have to go down a side street, immediately turn into another side street, and turn into a parking lot that looks unconnected. Learn more 10 reviews.

2: The Art of Arranging Flowers: A Complete Guide to Japanese Ikebana by Shozo Sato

Start Slideshow 1 of 10 Lesson 1 Celebrate big, billowing flowers with an exuberant large-scale arrangement. This display showcases the unrestrained beauty of hydrangeas. An armful of the flowers overflows a generous glazed-iron urn-shaped vase in an effortlessly elegant way. Tendrils of clematis winding through the blooms emphasize the cottage-garden feeling. An assemblage of begonia leaves snipped from houseplants invites a closer look and rewards the viewer with varied colors, patterns, and textures. The rich shades of red and green blend beautifully with the caramel-colored Mission vase. Flower stems naturally follow the shape of this vase: They reach up and out, and the result is delicate and light. Choose flowers with graceful stems, such as this crocosmia, for the most pleasing look. Shorter cuttings of maidenhair fern float beneath the blooms. Echo the idea with smaller vessels -- parfait glasses work perfectly -- holding just a few stems. A yellowware kitchen bowl of late-summer dahlias would certainly be lovely enough on its own, but adding a contrasting element -- here, wispy asparagus fronds -- make the hot colors and spiky forms even more striking. Swipe here for next slide 6 of 10 Tip A grid of clear cellophane tape spanning the wide mouth of the bowl supports the top-heavy flowers better than a frog would. Cut the stems short, and insert one or two flowers in each opening in the grid. Tuck fern clippings in last. Hydrangeas and clematis in purple tones look unified yet diverse. The aqua-colored McCoy bowl peeking out is a bright surprise. Dainty alstroemeria make much more of an impression when grouped by the dozen. A neat dome of them -- with every leaf removed -- is softened by a cuff of chartreuse hosta leaves. Swipe here for next slide Share the gallery.

Possible translations include "giving life to flowers" and "arranging flowers". It shows various arranging styles of tatebana ogibana wide-mouth right and upright styles. Plants play an important role in the native Shinto religion. Yorishiro are objects that divine spirits are summoned to. Evergreen plants such as kadomatsu are a traditional decoration of the New Year placed in pairs in front of homes to welcome ancestral spirits or kami of the harvest. Offering flowers at Buddhist altars became common. Although the lotus is widely used in India where Buddhism originated, in Japan other native flowers for each season were selected for this purpose. For a long time the art had no meaning and was merely the placing in vases, without system, of the flowers to be used as temple offerings and before ancestral shrines. The first flower arrangements worked out with a system were known as shin-no-hana, meaning "central flower arrangement". A huge branch of pine or cryptomeria stood in the middle, and around the tree were placed three or five seasonable flowers. These branches and stems were put in vases in upright positions without attempt at artificial curves. It was the first attempt to represent natural scenery. The large tree in the center represented distant scenery, plum or cherry blossoms middle distance, and little flowering plants the foreground. The lines of these arrangements were known as centre and sub-centre. Also displayed in these spaces were flower arrangements in vases that influenced the interior decorations, which became simpler and more exquisite. Together they form the basis for the original purely Japanese derivation of the practice of ikebana. The eighth shogun Ashikaga Yoshimasa " " , was a patron of the arts and the greatest promoter of cha-no-yu, the ceremonial tea, and ikebana flower arrangement. Yoshimasa finally abdicated the office in order to devote his time to the fine arts. It was he who said that flowers offered on all ceremonial occasions and placed as offerings before the gods should not be offered loosely, but should represent time and thought. Rules then commenced to be formulated. At this time ikebana was known as rikka. Rikka and nageirebana are the two branches into which ikebana has been divided. Popularity of the two styles vacillated between these two for centuries. In the beginning, rikka was stiff, formal, and more decorative while nageirebana was simpler and more natural. It was at this period that cha-no-yu reached its highest development and strongly influenced the flower art. A practitioner of tea was most probably also a follower of ikebana. So, while these two branches both started in the Higashiyama period, rikka better represents the taste of that time, and nageirebana more reflects the taste of the Momoyama period. Rikka lost some of its popularity in the Momoyama period, but in the first part of the Edo period " " it was revived and became more popular than ever before. Rikka reached its greatest popularity during the Genroku era. They gave few rules and their chief object seemed to be to withhold all information. Although of little instructional value, these books were fully illustrated, thus documenting the gradual progress of the art. Books about ikebana were published in succession. This was carefully written and very instructive, with rules and principles freely given. Although the text is similar to the contents of commentaries of the Muromachi period, the illustrations showed how to enjoy Tachibana. Tachibana had spread from monks to warriors and further on to townspeople. This was an age of utmost elegance. All the fine arts were highly developed, above all pattern-printing for fabrics and decoration. In this period, the combination of a pattern or design with lines that followed the natural growth of the plant produced the most pleasing and graceful results. Still, there were occasional departures into unnatural curves and artificialities that caused a shift, and nageirebana again revived. Until then only one branch of ikebana had been taught at a time, following the taste of the day, but now rival teachers in both rikka and nageirebana existed. From the decline of rikka, nageirebana, the origin of the present ikebana, grew in power and popularity. From this time on, it ceased to be called nageirebana and took the name of ikebana. In the Tenmei era " " nageirebana, or ikebana, advanced rapidly in favour and developed great beauty of line. The exponents of the art not only studied nature freely, but combined this knowledge with that of rikka, the result bringing ikebana to a very perfect state of development. After the Tenmei era, the purest and best taste in ikebana began to diminish, and a formal and artificial form of arrangement came into existence. This is the present form, which has a fixed rule or model known as heaven, human, and earth. A school is normally headed by an iemoto, oftentimes passed down within a family from one generation to the next. Some of the most historic and well-known schools are: He became a priest at the temple and spent the rest of his days practicing flower arranging. As time passed, other schools emerged, styles changed, and ikebana became a custom among the whole of Japanese society.

Everyday Health Healthy Living The Creative Business Of Fake Flowers Silk or fake flowers may not be loved by all, but artificial flowers hold a solid place in the world of crafts and design. Whether learning to create floral designs or turning a hobby into a business, silk flowers are here to stay. First, learn a brief history of fake flowers and then the basics of design. Finally discover what it takes to get started selling creations for every occasion using fake flowers. Watch the passion flourish and the desire to make a living and a life with fake flowers the centerpiece. What are Fake Flowers? Artificial flowers have come a long way since the days of plastic roses, tulips and daisies in outrageous colors that faded in the sun and became brittle. Crafting artificial flowers from various materials started as early as the 12th century in Italy. Florists jumped on the flower cart in the s by selling silk flowers in shops. Celluloid flowers became the rage in the s only to be banned from the market due to a flammable problem. Today fake flowers are produced using a wide array of materials. Manufacturers making cheap fake flowers use polyester. The cost is lower to make the flowers and in turn, consumers pay less money for favorite flowers in the hues of the rainbow. The less expensive fake flowers use plastic for stems, leaves, berries, stamens, and other parts of the flower. At the other end of the silk flower spectrum lie the pricey but authentic appearing blossoms and botanicals. Silk, rayon and cotton create detailed flower petals that vary in color and textures that mirror the real thing. A drop of clear glue on the side of a clear pink rose looks like a tiny tear of dew that makes the flower look alive and breathing. Plastic flowers carry a negative connotation as poor facsimiles to the genuine article. Expensive silks are made without using plastic for any part of the flower including the stem and leaves. Fake Flower Arrangements Designing with silk flowers requires the same skill set and rules that fresh flower work does. Create fake flower arrangements using traditional, abstract or historical design rules. The designs are used in homes, offices, stores and for special occasions. Silk flower weddings became popular for a variety of reasons. The bouquets and flower arrangements can be worked on well in advance of the big day. When creating silk floral designs the following tools are necessary: Baskets, urns, old and new dishes, terra cotta pots in various sizes, or boxes all make interesting containers. Let the imagination fly and come up with unique approaches to floral design. Because silks bend and can be shaped to droop, and peek up or down, the ease of working with permanent botanicals offers another reason to use them. Basic Flower Arranging Most flower arrangements follow a few basic guidelines. Before beginning, choose a shape: A newer natural design shape creates layers with a back row of one variety of grasses, wheat, foliage, or flowers and each row shorter than the one before. The flowers present a cascading or gradation effect in a rectangular container. Outside, the box arrangements tend to be avant-garde, abstract, and modern. Abstract floral designs look best in large open spaces, as they tend to be large and sculpture-like with huge, exotic flowers in bold colors. Anyone interested in creating dynamic contemporary designs should learn a bit about abstract art. The finished design should be one and a half times the height and width of the container. Cut foam to the shape of the container to allow at least one inch above the lip of the container to remain. Cover the foam with Spanish moss using the greening pins. With branches of foliage or leaves, outline the chosen shape cutting stems to the correct size. Reinforce each line with secondary flowers, leaving the largest or brightest flowers for the focal point. The focal point of any flower design draws the eye into the arrangement, but a well-schooled florist knows that if the eye lingers too long on the focal, the rest of the arrangement is not seen and the design looks static. The eye should follow the lines in and out of the design. This is where using a variety of flowers in different shapes, sizes, colors, and levels of maturity from tight bud to full-blown flowers adds interest, keeping the fake flower arrangement fresh and alive. Once the line is reinforced with secondary flowers and the focal point has been established, all that is left to do is filler. Turning a Hobby into a Business Those who discover the joys of creating silk flower arrangements can easily sell fake flower creations. Easier to work with, mail or keep than fresh flowers, artificial flowers last and hold up well under adverse conditions. Get started by finding a good book on how to start a small business. Write up a solid business plan and let passion for silk flower arranging be your guide. Opening a shop may be a dream, but it comes with a fair amount of risk and the need for an influx of capital. Take the silk flower show on the road. Submit pictures of fake silk flowers and arrangements to juried art and craft shows. This gets the feet wet and tests the market without the expense of an e-business or physical shop. If the fake flower arrangements sell like hot cakes at several art and craft sales, consider moving toward an e-business or selling wares on sites such as eBay. Selling on eBay requires an account, a digital camera and mailing supplies such as boxes, popcorn or filler to protect the product. Do the homework and learn about how others make selling online work before venturing into the unknown. The next step up may be a website devoted to all things silk. A well-developed website may be pricey, but worth it for the serious e-business woman. Suggestions for what to sell follow: Get creative and fun with fake flowers and set up the website for success. Another direction to take is the shop route. A shop dedicated to flowers, both fresh and fake, may encompass the bliss of a lifetime. When passion is part of work, it stops becoming work. Talk to the bank, talk to small business owners, read a multitude of books, and contact a financial advisor or accountant who can help with the number crunching. Learning how to make and sell creations with fake flowers may be the long waited for passion that turns into a thriving business. Study flower arranging through florist school or garden clubs that offer training in the art of floral design. Establish yourself as an expert on fake flowers by offering classes or teaching at a continuing education venue. When you find that making silk flower designs is more than a hobby; get busy selling.
