Some years earlier, he made himself "Lord of the Overmen" and as recently as three years ago, he almost engineered his appointment as head of the IPCC itself. Gersen concludes that Treesong must be due for another grand gesture any time soon. His extensive business empire, managed by Jehan Addels, includes Cosmopolis magazine, for which he often masquerades as the journalist "Henry Lucas". Gersen spends some time examining the Cosmopolis files for any material relating to Treesong. He is on the point of giving up when he discovers a photograph, apparently of a formal dinner, bearing the words "H A Treesong is here". There is no way to tell which of the people in the picture is Treesong, so Gersen devises a plan to unmask him. He launches Extant, a livelier sister magazine to Cosmopolis. He then publishes the picture in the free inaugural issue as part of a contest, offering large cash prizes to anyone who can first identify any or all of the ten people in the photograph. An attractive red-haired young woman, Alice Wroke, seeks temporary employment processing the contest entries. Gersen, expecting an attempt at infiltration by Treesong, covertly uses a lie detector on her and confirms his suspicions. Eventually, each of the subjects is identified, except for one man who seems to have a variety of identities. When a contestant submits the correct identification for all ten, Gersen confronts Alice and places most of his cards on the table: However, he conceals his personal interest. Information from the contest leads Gersen to suspect the photograph is of the highest-ranking Fellows of the powerful Institute. It includes seven members of the "Dexad" the Fellows of ranks to and , and the three Fellows of rank 99 ranks and are always vacant. All save one died at the banquet, poisoned by Charnay see below. The survivor is the man of many names - Treesong himself, clearly the murderer of the others. Three members of the Dexad were not present. One had died recently: Another had broken with the Institute and become a hermit. Gersen locates the last surviving member of the Dexad just ahead of Treesong, and saves him, in the process shooting Treesong in the leg. The letter also mentions a school reunion, to which Howard has been invited. Treesong himself calls the Extant offices, and identifies the people in the photograph, only to be told that all have been named already, and that he is too late to claim a prize. Gersen suspects that Treesong plans to attend the school reunion. Gersen travels to Maunish. Ledesmus recovers the book and sells it to Gersen. His guess is correct. Treesong arrives, accompanied by a band of menacing underlings, and perpetrates imaginative though non-lethal humiliations on those who had tormented him. Out of sight, Gersen dispatches the men assigned to take him away and uses their weapons. In a second interview with the Haradoahs he learns that the Cleadohes moved off-planet, and their destination. Otho Cleadohoe was township marmelizer "€" who transformed the flesh of corpses into a stony substance, after which the resulting "marmel" statue was placed in the cemetery. On broaching the subject with Alice, who is now his confederate, he learns that Treesong considers the Seven to be the embodiments of various aspects of his own personality, with "Immir" representing normal self. Gersen concludes that the Book would probably lure Treesong out of hiding. The Cleadohes now live on the jungle planet of Bethune Preserve. Treesong comes in search of his precious book. Tuty and Otho lure Treesong to their remote outpost, but double-cross Gersen, leaving him and Alice behind. Gersen and Alice manage to borrow a vehicle to follow in, but arrive late. The arch-villain wearily acknowledges himself to have been neatly trapped, mourns the narrow failure of his attempt to make himself the first Emperor of the Gaeian Worlds, and asks to be left alone. Gersen declines to take any further revenge on him and leaves with Alice and the Cleadohes. Before they "depart", the paladins perform one last service for Immir. A crash and a splash are heard; Gersen hurries back inside, to find Treesong face down and drowned in a pond, before the overturned chair, though he should have been unable to rise from it and it had been solidly secured. Gersen, his revenge complete, finds himself at a loss. He confesses to Alice that he does not know what he will do now that he has been deserted by his enemies. Charnay[ edit ] Charnay is a fruit that is delectable to eat, but deadly if incorrectly prepared a parallel to fugu and that is accordingly expensively exclusive. Three members of the Dexad were not present; one was already dead, Treesong murdered another separately, but was barely thwarted in his attempt on the last. References[ edit ] Jaffery, Sheldon Future and Fantastic Worlds:

A book suggests there are rigid attitudes around you, and represents your need to seek a knowledge that you are not yet aware of. If the book is intellectual, then this means you can sometimes seek knowledge from others when you do not need to.

Furthermore, as time went on, Daniel received some very significant visions of the future. What can we learn from these accounts? Do our dreams also need to be interpreted? They then began to serve the king along with the other wise men and counselors verse 17. Although Daniel and his friends had greatly impressed the king, their abilities were not entirely innate. As verse 17 explains: If God chooses to communicate with someone through a dream or vision, He will make sure the message is understood. Either the person will understand or God will provide someone who will be able to interpret the message. Nebuchadnezzar dreams of a great image. Soon after beginning to serve the king, Daniel and his friends faced a frightful situation. The dream was apparently so intense that the king asked his wise men to interpret it for him verses 1-6. Yet in connection with his request, the king put the wise men in a dire predicament. Instead, he insisted that they tell him both the dream and its meaning. His reasoning was that if they could tell him his dream, he could have confidence in their interpretation verse 9. Although his wise men were correct—that such a feat is not possible for humans without the assistance of God—the king did not want to hear such an explanation. Granted a delay, Daniel and his friends asked God to reveal the dream and its interpretation so they and the other wise men would not perish. He also told the king that God was the One who had revealed this information to him verses 10-12. The important lesson we learn about dreams from this account is that God is the only One who can provide the interpretation of dreams and visions. Humans cannot acquire this ability on their own. Another dream by Nebuchadnezzar. Sometime later, King Nebuchadnezzar had another troubling dream: So, once again, the king asked his wise men to interpret the dream for him. This time the king told his counselors the dream, yet they could not provide its interpretation verse 13-16. At last Daniel came before the king. Although King Nebuchadnezzar did not heed the advice Daniel gave him verses 17-19, nor did he necessarily stop worshipping his false gods, he did seem to understand that God was the One who made it possible for Daniel to interpret his dreams. Belshazzar sees a hand writing on the wall. Belshazzar was a successor to Nebuchadnezzar. One day he made a great feast for 1,000 of the leading people in his kingdom. The text does not state that this strange occurrence was a vision, but it was a divine message that needed to be interpreted. Belshazzar then frantically called for his wise men to read the writing and interpret it, but they could not do so verses 20-23. Dreams, visions and messages in the book of Daniel. In addition to interpreting the two dreams of King Nebuchadnezzar and the writing on the wall for King Belshazzar, Daniel also received several messages from God. The following chart provides a list of these divinely inspired messages from God recorded in the book of Daniel.
