This is a re-print of the original book, published in , following the year in which the legendary golfer Bobby Jones won the original version of golfs Grand Slamthe U.S. Open and Amateur.*

Martin Kaufmann March 25, 4: It was designed by Alister MacKenzie and Bobby Jones, and became home to the Masters and famous for its pristine conditions. Aside from the year it opened and the fact Jones loaned his name to the course, it had little in common with Augusta National. In recent decades, it had fallen into disrepair. Elgison is the president and co-founder of the Bobby Jones Golf Course Foundation , which is redeveloping the site as a nine-hole reversible course. It also will have a new short course and practice range, neither of which previously existed. Plans call for the course to open in late This is his native city, and the only thing that has his name on it is something that did not match up to his standards or befit the name on the golf course. Bobby Cupp said his father initially studied whether he could rebuild an hole course on the site. But he reasoned he could build a nine-hole course and still have room to create a practice range and kids course. In a memo written six weeks before he died, Cupp recalled a short course he did a quarter century earlier at Golf House Tennessee. Played in one direction, it will measure anywhere from 1, to 3, yards; played in the opposite direction, it is 1, to 3, yards. The reversible nines will be called Magnolia and Azalea, Elgison said. That system was developed by Dan Van Horn , founder of U. Kids Golf, which is based in Atlanta. Each hole has a double green with two flags; Elgison said greens will be as large as 12, square feet. The Georgia Golf House, which will be roughly 20, square feet, will house the pro shop and the 10th Hole Bar and Grille â€” another nod to Jones because the 10th hole at the Old Course in St. Andrews, Scotland, is named for him. Beyond that, the Golf House will become a hub for golf in the state. Part of the project involves relocating the neighboring Bitsy Grant Tennis Center , which currently has 10 courts. A multi-level parking facility is being built, and the top floor will have six tennis courts. Six more courts will be located adjacent to the parking structure. The tennis facility is scheduled to open in July, after which the existing courts will be torn up to make way for the ninth green of the golf course.
