The world's best team building events for businesses & organisations of all types & size. Founded in the Corporate Games are the world's largest multisport festivals for businesses with great sports and fabulous celebrations for.

They possess all the skills they need to succeed in the political arena "but all too often, no-one has taught them the rules of the game. What makes an individual successful in the "political arena"? According to research by Dr. Rick Brandon and Dr. Marty Seldman, successful politicians possess both mental empowerment - they "think and feel" positively about politics "as well as the skills to build a powerful reputation, network and presence within the organisation. Plenty of women conduct themselves with style and grace, excelling at public relations and relationship-building. All of this comes easy to women. Research shows that women are more intuitive, able to use both the right and left side of their brains simultaneously and more emotionally intelligent. They possess the skills that lead to success in the political arena. So why do women struggle with "being political"? But when I asked her why she found these fun but disliked political games, she was stumped. The answer lies, I believe, in two basic facts. First, she considered this "game" an unseemly and unnecessary one to be avoided if at all possible. Second, no one ever taught her the rules to the game of politics. Her father had taught her the rules of golf. Monopoly comes with a set of rules on the lid. The rules to Sudoku are printed above the game in the newspaper. If my delegate knew the rules, would she be willing to play? I think the answer is yes! So, here in black and white, I will attempt to codify the rules of the game for women. What other game allows you to win, lose or come in 5th place when you choose not to play? Being the bench warmer is not a desirable position to hold. Why not channel the energy you expend fuming about all the Machiavellian behavior into finding a way onto the playing field? We look at ideas, recommendations, and proposals through our own set of lenses. Either you can convince your stakeholder to buy a new pair of specs or you can polish and present your idea such that it looks beautiful through the specs your stakeholder is currently wearing. The same holds true for being politically savvy. Know your unique strengths and leverage these to support your success. You must also have a sales and marketing function to go out and sell the ideas to the public. You probably generate a number of fabulous ideas. But do you know how to brand, market and sell the idea to others? Often, when we fail to get our ideas heard, we assume it must be a faulty idea. Or the right idea presented at the wrong time. Perhaps it is a case of the right idea presented at the right time but to the wrong person or in the wrong manner. And in the Netherlands, being noticed is not necessarily a good thing. The Dutch believe in equality. No one is better than anyone else. No one should stand out. Many of us were raised with strong parental or cultural messages about self-promotion. Working hard but then staying quiet about what your accomplishments is like lighting a candle and hiding it under a bushel. First, no will see you shine. Second, your career could extinguish from lack of oxygen. Research shows that men are promoted based on potential while women are judged on their track record. If your accomplishments are not visible to others, opportunities are not likely to come your way. So when you do deliver, you better find a way to talk about it! Your track record counts and the decision-makers must know how many races you have completed, what place you came in and what you are doing to ensure the next win. Women, more than men, tend to believe in a meritocracy; that the world is fair. But some people are blessed with great intelligence; others possess great beauty. Some of us have access to better schooling. Others have parents who can open doors. Some of us have natural talents in the area of sports, art or music. And how we use our time determines whether we have an advantage. So take a look at how you manage your time. Do you spend as much time communicating upward as downward? Rule 9 There are friends - and there are allies Women tend to want to work with and build relationships with people they like. Friendships play a significant role when it comes to levels of engagement. We know this from Gallup research conducted on Employee Engagement. I am not encouraging you to build relationships with the "sharks or Machiavellians" in the organization. I encourage the women I coach to answer the following questions, "If you had power, what would you do with it? They would use their power wisely. So now that the rules are clear, I hope that the women reading this will understand the importance of being politically savvy and be more comfortable

"playing the game". It seems many talented women managers are just not interested in climbing corporate ladders and are leaving to start their own businesses. My hope is that one day I will see more of these powerful women staying and make a real impact at the tops of their organizations.

Create your career masterpiece by mastering the corporate game, according to these rules: Prepare for the rules to change while you're still playing. Realize that Trust is the only currency of the Corporate game.

However, having too many personal-space-invasion games, like "pass the orange with your neck," can quickly make your workers feel uncomfortable and awkward. Instead, plan an event around fun party games that encourage teamwork, creativity and a community spirit that your guests will enjoy. Trivia Games Many people love trivia games. Integrate questions about the company into your trivia questions. Accomplish this type of game by having guests answer questions from electronic devices on their tables. Use an overhead display and a game template. You can also send employees lists of questions to answer in advance and later incorporate these questions and their answers into a "Family Feud"-style game at the event. Scavenger Hunt Scavenger hunts encourage teamwork and creativity. Prepare a list of clues based on history, politics or information about the company. Create a trail so that employees follow it to find subsequent clues. Have some type of prize for the team that reaches the destination first. Outdoor Games Corporate events may be held outdoors to supply enough space for all of the company employees. Take advantage of your outdoor location by featuring outdoor activities. Employees can take part in Velcro jumping by wearing a Velcro suit and jumping on an adhesive wall. Paintball and miniature golf are also games that competitive employees will likely enjoy. A dunk tank is a favorite carnival game, and employees will be inspired if they get to dunk their boss. Charades or Pictionary Sometimes when employees act goofy, it can help break the ice. Organize a silly game that relies on the creativity of the workforce, such as Charades or Pictionary. Employees can act out different clues for Charades or draw elaborate pictures for Pictionary. Challenge Games Games that feature a challenge can motivate your employees to work together in a common goal. Some options are having a tug-of-war, relay race, three-legged race or potato-sack race. Add silly variations on these classics by having guests wrap their teammates in toilet paper or have them dress in clothes of the opposite gender before proceeding to the next portion of the race.

The corporate game taught me that values translate into behaviours – “good or bad” – and that my communication style is a reflection of my values. I’m a clear, no-nonsense, direct communicator. I’m a clear, no-nonsense, direct communicator.

Starting Out [edit] When starting a game, the player picks a company specialty. Three specialties are available: Each specialty doubles productivity in that area. After picking a specialty, the start screen allows choice of how many opponents to be faced, the difficulty of the game, what map will be used both real and fictional maps are available, starting funds, and what industry is to be competed in. Exploring [edit] The game is started at the home site which is randomly chosen on the map and with one sales executive. To introduce and sell the product to other regions, the region must be investigated. This process can take from 3 to 10 weeks depending on how far they are from the sites. After an area is explored, the player will know the market leader, if opponents have sites or units there, if the region has a resource, as well as statistics like what the targeted area desires in a product, their concerns with price, and how rich the region is. The Sales Executives [edit] The sales executives increase market penetration the percentage of stores carrying the product in their regions and all regions up to two spaces away from each executive. The sales executive can be moved around the map freely by plane; however, while in transit he will not grant any penetration benefit. To gain more sales executives the profit must be increased to a certain level by the end of a year. This gets harder later on as the amount to gain a new executive increases. It is also possible to get them through the use of Direct Action Cards. Manufacturing, research, and marketing buildings can be built and upgraded. Additional sites can be purchased but they become progressively more expensive. Other buildings include an intelligence facility, which will generate and display information in the form of graphs. Company stores can be built at any site to decrease employee expenses and therefore lower employee cost. To get better performance a training center will increase employee efficiency. Marketing, manufacturing, and researching buildings can be accessed in order to make adjustments to the multiple operations within the company. Sales buildings act similarly to sales executives that cannot be moved from region to region. The Marketing Department [edit] When a marketing building is built, it will be possible to hire and fire marketers. Marketing associates can be used to create marketing campaigns. As campaigns are created, marketing associate availability drops and the player is forced to build more marketing buildings in order to have more campaigns. These buildings can be upgraded to have more employees and to have more powerful marketing campaigns. For media, there are advertisements to print, and radio and television campaigns. Marketing campaigns can be moved from region to region similarly to a sales executive. The Manufacturing [edit] Starting with a simple garage, the player can upgrade to factories. Larger factories, and hire of additional employees, increase efficiency. Employees can be hired or fired as demand rises or falls. The production screen is where the price of the product is set. If the product is better compared to other companies then an overcharge can be made. The price should not be raised too far as demand will drop quickly if there are different companies in the same area and market leadership could be lost. Research [edit] This is where scientists develop new technologies to upgrade the product. The bigger the research building, the more scientists can be hired. Four projects can be queued so the player does not have to constantly have to come back to the screen and choose new technologies. Different projects also give different bonuses, such as decreasing the cost to manufacture or increase the appeal to consumers. Direct Action Cards [edit] Different regions may or may not have a resource in them. There are five resource types: Labor, Government, Intelligence, Marketing, and Underworld. Every year that a region is controlled that has a resource is one resource point. Having resource points allows the play of direct action cards. The game is started with two cards and an additional card is received every year. Direct action cards cost resources, and may have a monetary cost in addition. Cards have effects such as receiving money from the government, a research boon, revealing large blocks of regions, twisting the desires of consumers, physical destruction of competitors assets, cutting costs through illegal activities, and publicity boosts. The direct action card system has been likened to the card game Magic: Recently a fan of the game known as Money has tried to reunite the "Life is a game and there is no better place to illustrate the game of life than the corporate game," she tells us. "Much like professional sports teams, the corporate game consists of key.

The overwhelming consensus is yes, but the key to keeping your own authentic self in tact is the way in which you play. I earn a six-figure income and am a wife and mother. I feel a passion for what I do and am well respected. You must be vocal about what matters to you and be willing to sacrifice to lead the team to bigger and better victories. You must be willing to connect with others in your company and in the industry. This may mean doing a few favors for your connections in hopes they will repay you sometime in the future. This could also mean stroking a few egos. So if you are the no-nonsense, straight-ahead type, it might be hard for you to throw out praise. Risk is a major part of playing the game; you must be willing to work outside your comfort zone. And this can be scary for some as your chances of failing are greaterâ€”but you also have a lot to win if you succeed. Again, if you are not one to make nice with people you may not like, this could be difficult. Playing the game as a woman can bring a different set of rules as well. Women sometimes think being humble is the best course of action, but in the corporate game you must take credit for your accomplishments. They should do what they like to do and are good at. They will definitely have to be able to work with and for diverse people and be able to navigate in the game. If you are not your authentic self, people will not only lose respect for you but your credibility will go out the window. Not playing the game could affect your career negatively as well, as will playing it safe. If you decide to skip the game altogether be ready for a steeper climb up the ladder, explains Lindley. The mother lode is unpaid business taxes, largely from foreign corporations doing business in the United States. In effect, like street-corner artists hiding peas under walnut shells, such companies play games with their profits. By manipulating the prices charged among their own subsidiaries, the multinationals can concentrate profits in countries with low corporate rates and thus get away with a smaller total tax bite chart. The bottom line is that most foreign corporations operating in the United States pay little or no tax to Washington. At hearings last summer before the House Oversight Subcommittee, chairman J. The corporate shell game has been going on for at least 30 years, ever since multinational operations became a significant factor in the corporate world, and there have been periodic attempts to crack down. That year was an aberration; before and since, overseas companies in the United States have actually reported net profits, albeit tiny ones. But the "loss" was riveting. Congress voted a stiff new 20 percent fine and gave the IRS broader power to subpoena records from parent companies overseas. The tax agency also got to expand its overworked international staff and dangle a small salary premium to recruit talent. Abuses in pricing across borders - "transfer pricing," in corporate jargon - are illegal, if they can be proved. What would have been profits from the United States had wafted back to Japan. But such triumphs are rare, and the hurdles are mountainous. For one thing, small armies of accountants are needed to sift through corporate records in several countries, even if access is granted - by no means a sure thing. In one case, an agent who requested a specific document was sent 40 boxes of papers, without an index. Trained economists must rule in each case whether costs were realistically allocated. And since real-world cases are usually far more subtle than simple illustrative anecdotes, there is room for years of legal maneuvering over disputed facts, accounting practices and business judgments. Some abuses are blatant. One foreign manufacturer, for instance, sold TV sets to its U. Most cases are nowhere near as clear. What if the set sold outside has a slight change in the casing? Which subsidiary gets charged for shipping and insurance? The result, says the tax agency, was that Yamaha Motor U. But Yamaha argues that the IRS case ignores the colossal reality of the recession, which caught the company just as unprepared as its U. Tax Court is mulling the case. American-based multinationals have also been accused of squirreling profits away. Westinghouse Electric managed to book 27 percent of its domestic profit in Puerto Rico, where its final sales are tiny. To spur the Puerto Rican economy, Washington has set the corporate-tax rate there at zero. Westinghouse says the accounting is proper, since its "highest-profit products are made in Puerto Rico. Experts call that a crude weapon that may well fail to stand up in court; even the IRS initially objected to it. And in testing their new subpoena powers in foreign countries, IRS agents will be under the scrutiny of tax people there, who stand to lose any taxes that Uncle Sam succeeds in claiming. The prospects for litigation are wearying. When it comes to litigation, the IRS may also find little comfort in its expanded international staff to from or its big-city salary premiums of 8 percent over government standards. The agency is now eight years behind in merely auditing multinationals; corporate officials who make a decision may well be dead or transferred when the tax people finally show up to question it. And in competing for legal and accounting talent, the IRS is still severely outmatched. At one major multinational firm, the head of taxes says he tries to do the right thing. Ideally, that might be a whole new approach to international taxes, one that ignores the details of transactions and focuses on allocating shares of the total profit. In the long run, reforming international taxes along those lines may be inevitable. But any such attempt would be formidably complicated; few major foreign countries would welcome an overhaul of the entire structure, which in effect would require unanimous consent. For the foreseeable future, the corporate shell game goes on. By using tax havens and "trick" pricing, a corporation could slash its U. This typical transaction follows one trail. No profit is earned. The Irish subsidiary then lends money to the U.

About This Game The Corporate Machine™ is Stardock's classic real-time economic strategy game, available now on Steam. Dive back into the timeless battle for one of the most ruthless environments ever created: international trade.

Conduct successful team-building sessions that utilize corporate games in settings such as a company retreat, training event or team meeting. Ideas for corporate games include scavenger hunts, sports competitions or other recreational activities, game shows and contests. Games help employees learn new skills, techniques and strategies. Analysis By conducting regular employee satisfaction surveys, employers identify employee concerns. Games could be used in sales training, new employee orientation, team building and management training. Maybe you have identified performance gaps. To fill gaps, create corporate games on critical topics such as developing business acumen, valuing diversity, adhering to ethical business practices and upholding standards of business conduct. Design Designing effective corporate games involves identifying clear objectives. For example, you might design a game to teach people how to negotiate more effectively. By creating relevant challenges, scenarios and interactivity, corporate games encourage learning. For example, design a team-building game that challenges people to avoid hidden agendas, prevent internal competition, discourage defensiveness, supports diversity and rewards dependability and sharing credit. Other ideas for corporate games include icebreaker activities, simulations and contests. For example, award a prize for the employee who accrues the most volunteer hours. This encourages employees to participate in the community. Development Managers will prepare materials, rules and supplementary resources that participants use to play. Create online games using free tools to create activities such as puzzles, scavenger hunts, card games or contests. Provide opportunities to practice over and over in a protected environment, with immediate feedback, because this typically leads to improved performance back on the job, higher productivity, fewer errors and higher job satisfaction. Utilize technology when available and appropriate. For example, if your sales force has smartphones, deploy corporate games on mobile devices. Then, when the sales people have free time, while waiting in airports or hotels, they can play. This leads to ongoing learning and development. Types Planning scavenger hunt-style games involve listing questions, challenges or clues. Use scavenger hunt games to promote awareness about corporate policies, procedures, products and services. Creating quiz-show games involves developing a list a questions and answers. To foster both corporate team building and health and wellness, sponsor team sports activities such as volleyball, basketball and bowling. This encourages people from different parts of your business to come together outside of traditional work roles.
