Two Dan Cushman westerns in one collection "Craft of Ka-Yip" Ka-Yip has grown accustomed to his ways in his old age, living with his daughter and white son-in-law, overlooking the Missouri River, and smoking the remains of cigar butts cast off by the whites.

Gordon Lam as Li Chiu simplified Chinese: He was a man who believed in certain morals and principles, and we want to use this movie as a platform to convey those values to the audience. For me, that was the most important part of making this movie. However, Paragon Films Ltd, the studio producing the proposed film, closed and the project was abandoned. Principal photography for Ip Man began in March and ended in August; filming took place in Shanghai, which was used to architecturally recreate Foshan. Wong, who had been developing his own Ip Man biopic, clashed with the producers after learning that their film would be titled Grandmaster Ip Man Chinese: Ip Man is the first film based on the life of Ip Man. It also marks the fourth film collaboration between director Wilson Yip [3] and actor Donnie Yen. The music for the film was provided by veteran Japanese composer Kenji Kawai , who also served as a composer on the film, Dragon Tiger Gate which featured Wilson Yip and Donnie Yen as director and actor respectively. Yen had signed the contract and received part of the acting fee. However, the studio producing the film closed, and the project was abandoned. He had completed casting during principal photography in March A majority of the film focuses on events surrounding Ip Man that took place in Foshan in the s and s during the Sino-Japanese War. Having difficulties scouting a cotton factory suitable for shooting, set designers decided to recreate one in the style of the s. It was where Ip Man first taught Wing Chun openly to the public. Pillars were made to resemble English lampposts, and Western lighting, chairs and tableware were also used. To convey the culture and feel of the time, the buildings were made to look obsolete and worn out. Apart from historical references, Mak also created a glass house which was used in a scene in the film. This was all in the hopes of portraying an erudite and cultured Ip Man, as well as bringing out the special traits of Wing Chun. In one scene, he suffered a mild concussion after receiving four consecutive blows. It was disputed when film director Wong Kar-wai announced plans to make his own Ip Man film with Tony Leung Chiu-wai while filming Producer Raymond Wong wanted to name his film Grandmaster Yip Man, which bore a resemblance to the title Wong Kar-wai wanted to use for his film. The film was highly praised, based on survey sheets returned by the audience. Releases include single-disc [46] and two-disc special-edition formats.
