

1: The Dark Side of the Island - Review of Haunts of Mackinac, Mackinac Island, MI - TripAdvisor

The Greek islands, sun-drenched and tranquil, evoke pictures from a tourist brochure. It takes a special imagination to dredge their blood-soaked history when, as a subject land in WW II, island revolts were crushed by the occupying Germans. In those days, Hugh Lomax was sent by the British to aid.

The kids even waited in anticipation, if only for the lure of its name they figured it must have something to do with Star Wars. This past weekend we finally had a chance to get down to South Nanaimo to check off this epic hike. On both sides of this section of the river, you will find steep rock cliffs, which are frequented by climbers. The areas are aptly named for their location. The trail follows the south side of the river upstream, in a meandering sort of way. While walking upon a high cliff you will have spectacular views of the flowing water below you. The trail is quite short only about 1 km, but the area is so full of interesting things that you can literally explore it for hours! The area you arrive at after you descend the first ladder shown above is jaw-dropping. The kids thought it looked like something out of Jurassic Park. You wind up being in the middle of towering sandstone cliffs, that are surrounded by lush vegetation obviously the vegetation would look a little different if it were another season. As you walk through this narrow canyon, make sure to look up. The rock faces are simply incredible! If you are a climber you might be interested to know that there are several areas where clips have already been placed. We spotted several caves that would be amazing to explore, one of which already has a rope ready to descend. But from what we saw the trail kind of peters out and becomes quite unmaintained at around the 1 km mark. It was at this point that we decided to head down towards the river to find a spot to have our lunch. We climbed over a few large boulders and sat upon a perch with a spectacular view of the river beneath us. For a reference point, there is a house with a unique outdoor spiral staircase perched upon the rock cliff on the opposite side of the river. When you see that house, you have come to what we considered the end of the Dark Side trail. Difficulty of Trail This trail has no steep inclines other than the ladders, but as I mentioned, there are lots of other obstacles to manoeuvre around ladders, bridges, boulders, etc, which are unavoidable. This hike is NOT suitable for dogs! For obvious reasons, this trail is unfortunately not stroller or wheelchair friendly either. This hike deserves to be taken at a slow pace, due to the incredible scenery. I am thinking this was due to the light, or lack thereof in some sections. We were there mid-day, so perhaps a different time of day would allow for better photo ops. Turn right on Riverbend Road and follow it to the very end. You will see a gravel parking area underneath the power lines. After parking, walk west upriver along the trail that stays on top of the southern edge of the river bank. As mentioned above, the trail eventually leads down into a canyon. She was in high school when a boy she had turned down threatened to kill her. In her early 20s, she caught a man crawling through her bedroom window – the same neighbour who tried to rape her years earlier. Vincent and the Grenadines has a "cultural epidemic" of violence against women, says a new report. Omega John was left blind in one eye after her ex-boyfriend punched her. She reported the boy to police, too, but they just told her to go home. By the time she discovered her neighbour climbing in her window, Sabrina had lost faith in the local authorities. She attempted suicide but ultimately chose to live – and her only chance at safety, she decided, was to flee. But according to a new report spearheaded by Quebec researchers, the sun-dappled island has a dark side: Article Continued Below In , St. Vincent had the third-highest rate of recorded rapes after the Bahamas and Swaziland, according to a United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime document cited by the report. More recent UN statistics showed that in , St. Vincent was the fourth-worst country worldwide when it came to its rate of recorded rapes. Domestic abuse and incest are common. Between and , 60 women died from gender-based violence or at the hands of their partner – a staggering figure considering the under-reporting of cases and St. Vincent and the Grenadines Human Rights Association. Vincent and the Grenadines does not provide adequate protection to women. Over the past decade, more than 4, Vincentians – four per cent of the current population – have sought asylum in Canada, the majority being women. While there are no official statistics on why Vincentian women are seeking asylum, court documents suggest that many are fleeing violence. Vincent after a local charity called La Maison Bleue alerted them to the issue. After a year of research, the clinic published its findings earlier this month in a page report, which it submitted to the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. The document is a response to St. The treaty requires that states contribute periodic reports on the status of women in their country, which St. Vincent submitted last year. Vincent and many women are particularly vulnerable because they depend on their husbands or partners for financial support, the report found. And even if a woman obtains a protection order against her abuser, she still remains at risk. Vincent is the lack of statistics, the report found. Under the convention, countries are required to compile information on violence against women but in St. Vincent, statistics are nearly impossible to obtain. The best source of information is the local newspapers, which frequently feature stories of Vincentian women being murdered or attacked. But they will pressure St. Vincent to start taking the necessary steps to ensure that girls and women live their lives without fear and violence – and the urge to flee.
