2: The Detective Wore Silk Drawers by Peter Lovesey

The Detective Wore Silk Drawers () sounds like a kinky title but it actually refers to a cop going undercover as a boxer in this nice piece of historical detective fiction set in Victorian England.

June discovered Waxwork by reading a Time magazine review and was so impressed with it she convinced producer Peter Eckersley that it would be perfect for television. Eckersley agreed and it became Film of the Month. Peter Lovesey had written seven Cribb books but, as Granada commissioned fourteen episodes for the series, he wrote the remaining seven episodes as scripts with the assistance of his wife, Jacqueline Lovesey. The CID, as it is now known, is the normal term for the plainclothes detective division in the United Kingdom. Founded by Colonel Sir. Charles Edward Howard Vincent in , in the Department came under the authority of the Commissioner. The Department was paid slightly more than uniformed police, and could also claim a number of allowances. The series was set in the bright sunlit or fog-shrouded England of Queen Victoria and the principal photography took ten days. The smoke gun was a much utilised piece of equipment, creating the atmosphere of the time. Swing, Swing Together was filmed on the canals around Oxford - at the time the whole crew sank because the lighting equipment was so heavy. In Abracadaver the theatre was specially built by talented designer, Alan Price. Cribb pursued his villains by boat, hansom cab and on foot. He was the epitome of a policeman of the past - finger printing was yet to be invented, he caught criminals before forensics, helicopters, speed cameras and DNA were available and old-fashioned detection work was done using logic and common sense. The series was sold to over 88 countries around the world. Peter Lovesey was born in Whitton, Middlesex in . After completing his education, he became a full time author and in began his career with Wobble To Death, introducing Detective Sergeant Cribb, the Victorian detective. Sergeant Cribb went on to feature in seven more books and was adapted into two television series. His mysteries and short stories have won him worldwide acclaim. Recently he was the story consultant on the Television Series Rosemary and Thyme. He currently lives in Chichester, West Sussex.

Sergeant Cribb and Constable Thackeray, his assistant are asked to conduct investigations to determine the cause of the murder of a contender who was taking part in a race walking competition that was known as Wobbles. The main objective on the race is to find out one could walk, hobble or run for a period of six nights and six days. The participants as well as observers of the competition are expected to pay an entrance fee. In addition, there are townsmen who are ever ready to pay the wagers for the results. Most competitors consider the race a deadly and bloody fiasco. At the beginning of the race, in the chilly and foggy November, sixteen participants are ready to take part in the race. Charlie Darrell and Erskine Chadwick are among the actual athletes who have prepared for this race in the best way possible. The five hundred milers are among those prospected to win the upcoming race. The rest are only men who decided to join the bandwagon with the hope of becoming in third or fourth positions and behind. In simple terms, these men do not have any hope of becoming the winners of the game at the end of the day. The winner of the competition will end of receiving a prize of five hundred pounds as well as a belt that will make him to be known as the champion pedestrian in the entire world. On the second of the competition, Darrell falls like he has never experienced in his life. Before the end of the day, he was dead. It does not take long for his trainer to be found dead as well.
