At the end of the nineteenth century, the first water main was built over the springs, by Charles Hamilton to supply his paper company and some private homes with water. The springs bubble up from underground streams in two spots in the shallow lagoon they form.

The Plagues and the gods of Egypt Source: Heart of Wisdom Most of you will recall the story of when Joseph found favor with God, saved the Egyptian people from a terrible 7 year famine, and then how his family moved to Egypt and after many years became the slaves of the Egyptians. What you may not know, is that those plagues were not just an incentive to let His people go. Egypt had many, many gods and goddesses that they worshipped. This demonstration of power was not only to show the Israelites that their God was alive and could be trusted, but also to show the Egyptians that their gods were nothing. The confrontation that played out was the God of the Bible against the false gods of Egypt! The water turned to blood on the Nile and all the rivers of Egypt, even in waters already drawn from the river and stored in pots. It caused a stink throughout the land. Osiris was the chief god of the Nile. In addition, there was Nu, the god of the life of the Nile, also Hapimon the water bearer and Tauret. Frogs in abundance infested the land of Egypt to the point where they were found in their houses and even their beds! Hekt, half human half frog. Geb was the god of the earth who was accredited with the bounty of the soil. Swarms of bloodsucking gadflies, in their houses and on the ground. Khepri had the head of a fly. Death of Cattle and Livestock Which god? Apis, the Bull god; Hathor, the cow-headed god. Moses took ashes and threw them in the air, bringing boils and sores on man and beast. Isis, goddess of medicine and peace; Thoth, god of intelligence and medical learning. A tempest of hail, fire and thunder. Nut, goddess of the sky; Horus, the sky god; Shu, the wind god. Locusts, this directly affected their food supply. Nepri, the grain god; Ermutet, goddess of child birth and crops. Thick darkness Which god? Ra, god of the sun; Tenth Plague: Death of the firstborn. He was believed to be the son of Ra manifest in the flesh. After all these plagues were initiated, where were these great gods of Egypt that the people worshipped? They were no match for the God of the Universe!! Even during the absolute darkness there was natural light in the dwellings of the Israelites. Although the magicians were able to repeat the first two plagues, they could not replicate the others. Thanks for stopping by!

2: Rock Creek Natural Area

In addition, the scoffing of end times doctrine climbed to new levels. Many churches won't address eschatology leaving their people unaware of the times we live in.

Boiling Springs ranks seventh in size of springs in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Two vertical diabase dikes, made up of highly impermeable igneous basalt parent rock, cut through the limestone bedrock in the area and form a subterranean "V", with Boiling Springs located at the interior tip of the V. What is now eastern North America began to separate from what is now north-western Africa. Magma was generated through decompression melting, and this molten rock pushed up to fill the faults. The cooler temperatures of the upper crust quickly solidified the hot rock, preventing it from reaching the surface. This geological process created large, thin, subvertical sheets of impermeable basalt, or diabase dikes. However, some of the water is trapped by the impermeable diabase dikes, which act as a hydrologic barrier. The water becomes progressively confined by the dikes as it nears the tip of the "V". Due to the positive pressure created by this confinement, water is pushed up to the surface and out of the artesian aquifer, giving the impression of "boiling" springs. The Bubble One of the most prominent springs in this area is called the "Bubble". The lake dates to the s when the dam was used to provide water power for iron production. In the midth century, a grist mill was built by Michael Ege on the southeast shore of the lake, to provide flour and grain for the iron works. This building has been converted into apartments. This Georgian structure is the most outstanding example of architecture in the Boiling Springs Historic District and of major historical significance as the home of the Ege family. The mansion is presently in a deteriorating condition and is uninhabited. The lake feeds into Yellow Breeches Creek. A picturesque, natural stone three-arch bridge, built in , stands behind the mill, spanning the creek. This limestone trout stream has developed a national reputation for fly fishing. This is arguably the most intensely fished section of water in Pennsylvania when the White Mayfly hatches. In , the Appalachian Trail Conservancy started recognizing towns near the trail that are assets to hikers and the trail. It is the only Appalachian Trail Conservancy office that is located on the famous footpath itself. Several hundred hikers pass through every week during the busy seasons. Hikers often mail themselves packages to pick up at the Boiling Springs Post Office, which is just feet from the trail. Nearby Allenberry Resort Inn and Playhouse rents rooms to hikers for a reasonable rate. History[edit] Boiling Springs was settled by Europeans prior to The Carlisle Iron Works was in full production by the s, and a grist mill was built at the end of the lake in He built his Front Street home in Kaufman and Boiling Springs played a role in the Underground Railroad. Kaufman was an Underground Railroad agent from to The Underground Railroad asked him to set up a necessary stopover between Shippensburg and Harrisburg. Kaufman provided food and transportation to fugitive slaves passing through the area; his barn and a densely wooded area nearby served as shelter. Kaufman was sued by a Maryland slave owner in and convicted in Cumberland County, [8] but the verdict was overturned by the state Supreme Court. District Court in Philadelphia and convicted. Boiling Springs is now part of the Network to Freedom, a series of noteworthy sites along the Underground Railroad. In , trolley car lines were added running from Carlisle and Harrisburg. The Valley Traction Company leased the lake in and built a park as a destination for passengers on their trolleys. Boiling Springs became a resort community, with travelers coming to picnic and boat on the lake, with such park attractions as a dance pavilion, picnic pavilion, miniature steam railway and a merry-go-round. The trolley was operated until around

The roots of the Israeli-Arab conflict have come full circle today. They have indeed fathered many nations. For centuries the Arab nations wandered the deserts of Arabia and never projected any borders between themselves. Most are aware that Israel was reborn in 1948, but not many people realize that the Arabs discovered nationalism in the same period. The Holocaust, he said, represented the dry bones and graves of the Jewish people, and out of that horror the State of Israel was resurrected, just as the Lord said would happen through the Hebrew Prophet Ezekiel. Rarely has any world leader given a major address on an international stage declaring End Times prophecies from the Bible have come true. But that is exactly what Netanyahu did. Netanyahu gave a political address from Auschwitz, Poland. It is the redefining of the relationship between the United States and Israel. The basic tenets in the U.S. There would be no surprises. Neither country would do or say something regarding the Middle East without the other country knowing about it ahead of time. There would not be daylight between the two countries. Israel and America could disagree—but never publicly. There was a reason for this close cooperation. A single nuclear bomb would level the place. It needs the protection of the United States to hold its enemies in check. If the White House truly wanted to minimize the possibility of Iran obtaining a nuclear weapon, it would not have given up concessions the way it did. It would not have communicated its message that the military option is impossible. Israel is now between a diplomatic rock and a hard place. Israel is in an alliance with a country that does not seem to have Israel in its list of priorities. Also, the next generation of U.S. They do not seem to recognize the cognitive disconnect involved with accusing Israel of genocide while praising the actions of Iran and Hamas. As the United States looks more like Europe, Israel looks more alone. The only thing missing from this analysis is the fact that Israel will never be alone. Israel was fulfilling prophecy when it was regathered in the land in 1948 as a state for the first time in 2,000 years. Ultimately, Israel will recognize Jesus as their Messiah and true protector: They will grieve bitterly for him, as for a firstborn son. It is here right now. For the past 6 decades, all the major players have been taking the stage and playing the parts that God said they would. Consider the following events: The Jews have been back in their homeland since 1948, and though they still have some battles ahead of them, God has promised that they will never again be driven out of Israel. The bible looks forward to the time when Jesus will physically return to the land where He was born so many years ago.

Bubbling Springs is a beautiful spot. Weeping willow trees sit elegantly over the deep green creek, and the lushest grass shimmers in the sunshine. A paved path leads alongside the creek and there are little benches where you can stop to rest.

Jacob Leave a comment Returning to the source is something we need to do everyday. We read in Taoist texts of the idea of returning to source. There are all kinds of methods and symbolic instructions for transforming the body. Returning to the source is an approach to living we can embrace everyday and within our practices no matter how advanced or often we partake in our art forms. The path of recovering from a major surgery like an intervertebral fusion is a winding one filled with pot holes, setbacks and frustration. It also has a plethora of opportunities to rediscover lost art forms and practices. For me, it was about treating every moment as a decision to bring movement to every part of my body. A year after the surgery, I can tell you without regular movement my body begins to remind me of its importance. Small nerve sensations speak to me of the edge I live on every day. I certainly do not have the pain and nerve issues that brought me to my knees, sent me to urgent care, restricted my walking range to 50 feet, or started me down the path of opioid and muscle relaxer addiction. I can do everything I was able to do before I first felt that twinge in my back after shoveling some wet Colorado snow. Furthermore, I can do it without medications. Going through the process of conservative techniques, pain management, surgery, and rehabilitation has given me a new awareness of the edge we all live on with respect to our ability to move, our general health and the myriad threats to our daily living. It has also revealed to me the importance of enjoying what we have and the need to balance risk and reward in our daily decisions. Nor have I let myself not care about what I do with my body, health and life. Some days are better than others. Just the other evening I was practicing the foundation exercised called the dan-yu. I was fairly relaxed and found the connection Master Moy helped me find years ago. Focusing on the bubbling spring on the bottom of the foot, the movement felt like it did not stop. There was no bottom or top of the movement but rather transitions from squatting down to standing up and back again. My pelvis opened and closed with the movement and timed with my inhalation and exhalation. After a few cycles, the movement began to integrate into a single ever-changing experience. The breath guided not only the up and down but the expansion and contraction in the pelvis or perhaps those movements created my breath. Both are true and depend only on our perspective. The weight stayed anchored in the bubbling springs throughout. The bubbling springs is an acupuncture point on the sole of the foot. It is an entry point for the kidney meridian. The image of the bubbling spring is apt as it brings about the idea of energy bubbling up and supporting the life around it. All movement within the body happens with fluids and lubricity. The bubbling spring in Chinese acupuncture theory is an entry or source of this energy. Without the renewing vitality inherent in the Bubbling spring, we degrade over time becoming dry, rigid and inflexible. Further stagnation exacerbates this situation. I witnessed a lot of stagnation through the trials and tribulations along my path through the forest of immobility over the last couple of years. It was simply a focal point or schwerpunkt to rediscover after a significant change. In mythological terms, it was a threshold I passed returning from another realm where I had to slay one of my many dragons of pain and suffering. My schwerpunkt or center of gravity in my life is movement without which death begins to speak to me over my left shoulder or through the nerves in my leg. Movement and change bring about learning and growth keeping mortality at bay. Moving and changing removes oppressive nature of mortality from our concern and connects us with our internal and external environments. Paradoxically, being more aware of my mortality and eminent but unknown time of death allows me to live more fully. And herein lies the true source of vitality of life. Respect for life and movement come from accepting death, stillness and the unknown moments ahead. Being certain about anything is a form of stagnation preventing learning, moving and change. Everything lives and dies. Movement and stillness are intimately related. Bringing these facts into our daily lives is a source of vitality, humility and respect. It is returning to the source.

I hope you all had a very Merry Christmas! It's hard to believe that we are at the end of , which has interestingly been a tumultuous year all over the world.

Not Your Enemy I am not your enemy. Sometimes with tears in my eyes from heartbreak. Sometimes with a wave of anger ready to crash down on both our heads. Quincy, dear one, I am not your enemy. Your battle is not with me and my battle is not with you. But right now, it sure feels like it. I understand childish exuberance. I understand the struggle for independence. I understand the frustration of disappointed hopes. Your eagerness to bruise me feels intensely personal, and your aim for my heart wounds me to my core. I am not your enemy. I do not understand fully the scars that you carry. I do not understand fully what it feels like to be adopted. I do not understand fully what that loss means to you. You, dear child, were my gain. I want so much for delight, joy and love to characterize our relationship. I want your heart to be softened, transformed and healed by the perfect love of a Holy Father. Your imperfect mom is struggling. To love when I feel rejected. To be patient in the process. To continue to see the real adversary and to fall on my knees before the Lord. And you, darling boy, are not my enemy. You are my precious son. May you experience the love of Christ, though it is too great to understand fully. Then you will be made complete with all the fullness of life and power that comes from God.
