Grigson, Sophie; Smith, Georgia Glynn Assuming no prior knowledge, this book takes you through the basics of shopping and cooking equipment. It then covers each essential cooking technique and food in turn, moving step-by-step through the basics with lots of useful advice on the possible pitfalls and showing variations once you have mastered.

She was a long-time food columnist with The Observer, and won awards for her cookery books including Vegetable Book and Fruit Book. On graduating from university in 1954, she spent three months in Florence, Italy. The editor of the book was poet and critic Geoffrey Grigson (1913–85), whom she later married, becoming his third wife. Elizabeth David read the book and was impressed by it, and recommended Grigson as a food columnist for The Observer, for whom she wrote a column from 1961 until her death in 1995. Her long-lasting association with the newspaper produced some of her most successful books, such as Good Things and Food With the Famous. In 1963, Fish Cookery was published, followed by The Mushroom Feast, a collection of recipes for cultivated, woodland, field and dried mushrooms. Grigson died in Broad Town, Wiltshire, on the eve of her 62nd birthday. Her daughter Sophie Grigson born is also a cookery writer and broadcaster. Jane Grigson left to the English-speaking world a legacy of fine writing on food and cookery for which no exact parallel exists. She is also frequently opinionated and acerbic in her opinions about foods she does not like. In her Vegetable Book, she says, for example, of the beetroot: We do not seem to have had much success with the beetroot in this country. It is not an inspiring vegetable, unless you have a medieval passion for highly coloured food. With all that purple juice bleeding out at the tiniest opportunity, a cook may reasonably feel that beetroot has taken over the kitchen and is far too bossy a vegetable. Her books also often frequently contain personal recollections of culinary habits in Northumbria, Wiltshire and Touraine. Her personal collection of books on food and cooking forms the core of the Jane Grigson Library, housed at Oxford Brookes University. However, this is now held to be a misconception, albeit an extremely popular one: The Jane Grigson Trust was set up in her memory on 3 April 1995, as an educational charity. In March 1995, in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of her death, the Jane Grigson Trust set up an award for new food writers, the Jane Grigson Trust Award, to be awarded for the first time in March 1996. Macmillan, with illustrations by Gillian Zeiner; an anthology of English and Welsh recipes of all periods chosen by Jane Grigson, for which she was voted Cookery Writer of the Year.
