The Future Looks Dark- Why I Am Still Excited To Live Now At times, I wonder if in the grand scheme of things we humans of the digital age are so much better off than our prehistoric hunter-gatherer ancestors.

Tweet Diesel vehicle owners are facing an uncertain future. With the ban on new fuel vehicles looming in , the push towards electric and ever-decreasing emissions tolerances, the future looks dark for diesel. Breakthrough Magazine finds out why frustrating filters are no longer the last line of defence. The carbon left over from unburnt or partially burnt diesel is bad news, particularly the small, ultrafine kind PN which poses a serious risk to human health. In order to prevent PM from polluting the air, diesel vehicle manufacturers fit their models with filters DPFs designed to catch and contain this dangerous by-product. However, the modification has not been an unqualified success - as Simon Johnson, Director of CGON, realised when he bumped into his local postman. This was because of the filter. The result is a faster, more complete burn of the fuel, which has the effect of vaporising all the particulates up to the cylinder wall in the combustion chamber. Developing the box was a seven-year process for Brian. But he added more than just cash and finally took over the business last year. You can have the ezero fitted to your vehicle by a network of installers at garages across the country. CGON pays the installers and supplies the boxes direct, in order to keep costs down for customers. Ezero boasts four patents to cover the electronics, materials, software and overall design. Also, a by-product of using stainless steel is hexavalent chromium, a highly dangerous banned substance that cannot even be tested for in the UK. All new models have to be tested in a real world setting, to avoid vehicles adopting a lab conditions cycle. We use the mass airflow sensor to tell us how much air is coming into the car and through our electronics, we produce enough gas to get a ratio that enables us to get this constant improvement in miles per gallon. If you look to Africa and Asia, those markets are going to be using oil until the last drop has gone. Also, although the UK Government is saying there will be no more petrol or diesel cars in 20 years, there is petrol and diesel in the marine industry. So transport is only part of the opportunity for this product. Could you be eligible?

It really sounds so hopeful but not as frank as his drumbeaters describes it. There are quite a number of contradictions that create doubt and confusion as to what he really intends to achieve during his term as President. Undoubtedly, he is really the only President who is so resolute and determined to lick this evil in our society that has caused so much harm especially to the youth of our land. It shows his care and concern for our young people who are easy preys to this pernicious menace which has not been given the same kind of attention by past administrations. Time and again however it has been pointed out that no matter how laudable is his purpose in waging this war he should employ justifiable and legal means to achieve it. Notable and alarming in this connection is the rise in the number of suspected drug addicts, dealers and pushers mostly belonging to the poor sector of our society who are killed during the one year period of his administration. So far no investigation has been conducted to find out if they are really done in self-defense or if there is reasonable necessity of the means employed to prevent or repel the unlawful aggression. On the contrary, it seems that our policemen are even encouraged to go on with such killings with a promise that they will be protected and or pardoned if charged and convicted. So, expect more of these EJKs in the coming years. In fact they have also proliferated into shooting to death done by unidentified motor-cyclers riding in tandem. Undoubtedly, the value of human life has been seriously degraded under this administration. He cited in this connection, the alleged TROs issued against the implementation of the Reproductive Health Law already passed by Congress. Apparently, he, or his advisers have misunderstood the ruling of the SC here. The SC has simply clarified and defined the meaning of abortifacients. Up to now however the FDA has not satisfactorily proven that the pills and devices procured by the government will not primarily or secondarily lead to abortion, thus disallowing their distribution. On the contrary however, regular surveys conducted by pollsters in this regard show that more and more of our countrymen are getting hungry everyday with no food on the table. The more accurate future state of our country in this regard is therefore, that the few rich and oligarchs are getting richer and poor are getting poorer and hungrier. Ironically the tax reforms being pushed by the administration for raising more money supposedly to help the poor will not however produce such desired result. The poor may really have more money because of this tax reforms package. But the increase in taxes will also result in the increase in the prices of foods and other prime commodities. Hence even with more money to spend, they will also be dissipated in buying their basic needs and daily sustenance. They have been dislodged from their residence for more than three months now and are longing to return home but are not allowed yet because there is still no end in sight to the ongoing hostilities against the rebellious terrorists who attacked the city. Then in his ending plea, PRRD also asked for an end to corruption in government. It seems however that his plea falls on deaf ears as delay in the processing of papers in government offices persist due to red tape that grow longer and longer.

The Future Looks Dark: Sci Fi Horror Films About Dystopian Futures Writers and filmmakers have long been fascinated by the idea of what the future might look like. It rarely look.

Tell me what they have in common. Robots and space travel. Robot take over and colonization of another world. Tough city cop and a astronaut farmer. These films are not related in any sense at all, except for one thing. They both speak about the future. Two drastically different versions of our future. Now films, even though their primary purpose is to entertain us, act as a reflection of society. They reflect our actions and our current ideologies. There as been a unique and drastic shift on the perspective of the future when it comes to films. Films used to see the future as bright, clean, and wondrous, the pinnacle of human society, not every film held this view but a majority of the films did. When you look back to Back to the Future you see the year that we are currently living in have flying cars and holograms. I guess they were wrong about the future but still, an optimistic view. I, Robot held the perspective that the future entailed artificially intelligent robots who served us and medical advances that could rebuild parts of the body. Yet when you look at films such as Wall-E or Elysium, you see a different future. A world filled with pollution, poverty, overpopulation, and overall an inevitable destruction of the human race. Interstellar is based in a future where we have over farmed to the point of not being able to produce any other crop other than corn. Wall-E is based on a world where our pollution forced us to move to a spacecraft for hundreds of years. Now which future would you like to live in? The better one right? But do you honestly believe that we will achieve such a future? That is where the shift will be further explained.

The future looks dark The mighty Pakistani team looks so defeated at the moment that there is little hope of salvation in the near future. Mar 05, John PTI There is nothing as pathetic or dismal in sport as when the giants look ordinary. This fall from the heights has been the stuff of many classics but when it happens right there in front of a million eyes it looks very real. The mighty Pakistani team looks so defeated at the moment that there is little hope of salvation in the near future. It is not just about the defeat against India, nor its ouster from the World Cup without even being able to put up a real fight, that should be of concern to Pakistan. The team will have to rebuild since at least three or four top players will find no place in the team after the World Cup. The battering that the team received against India will most probably send captain Waqar Younis and Wasim Akram into retirement. The Waqar-Wasim dissention in the team has been written about but considering that both of them will be forced to retire means that the divide in the team will no longer be a problem. The problem is the casting away of four great players and the yawning gap that it will produce. A world cup campaign gone awry can have tremendous negative repercussion on the game in the country. New players will replace them, and some of them are already in place. But what about the team? Imran Khan has said that the team did not have any strategies in place against India but just waited for India to commit mistakes. However both he and Wasim Akram were pretty clear that on a day when a great batsman like Sachin Tendulkar was playing the innings of his life there is nothing any bowler could have done. After the World Cup, Pakistan will have to refit themselves under the leadership of wicket-keeper Rashid Latif most probably , if not Saeed Anwar. A long-term prospect as captain is Yousuf Youhana whose religion he is a Christian will go against him. Very few players will be willing to take on the mantle of captaincy considering how difficult it is to hold the team together as Waqar realized to his dismay. Too much has been made of a brawl between Inzamam-ul-Haq and Yousuf Khan during practise. The brawl itself is not the problem but if there has to be a scuffle during a fun game it shows how worked up each player is. That could be because of their performance. The team needs a new Imran Khan, But that person is not around. Shoaib Akhtar, Mohammed Sami, Abdul Razzaq will be in charge of the new ball, but how much of a threat will these three hold for the opposition? Who will take charge of the middle order till and when Inzy returns to form? Is there a teenager somewhere there in the maidans of Peshawar who can come to the rescue of the team as many youngsters have done in the past. The century against India is unlikely to get Saeed Anwar any long extension in one-dayers and he is unlikely to be around in Sharjah in April. But the was a classic innings built up of little nudges and late cuts and made with a bat which has Inzy inscribed on it. Anwar said later that he decided to let the ball come up to him instead of chasing them on that pitch and that is what helped him. When the ball came he made way and then cut the ball. Come to think of it. It was pure poetry befitting the grand finale of his career. If at all he gets to stay in the team a bit longer, it will be just to play out from memory. The century against India is up there among the top innings. Destiny too it seems conspired against Pakistan not letting some of these great players go away after a last great act in their game against Zimbabwe. They deserved a better last hurrah.
