The Gallantry Bank Copper Mine, Bickerton, Cheshire: with a review of mining in the Triassic rocks of the Cheshire-Shropshire Basin.

History[edit] Neolithic and Bronze Age[edit] Cropmarks near Rawhead Farm suggest a possible neolithic or Bronze Age settlement on the northern hill, which is of the " banjo enclosure " type, consisting of a circular enclosure with a narrow enclosed entrance. Archaeological investigations have shown that both ramparts are strengthened by dry stone walling; the inner rampart also has timber strapping. The mine was owned by the Egerton family of Oulton, with eight miners being employed between and The flue of a pumping engine that was used to drain the mine, it dates from the early 19th century and is a grade-II-listed building. Seven were captured and executed in around A photograph of shows the well in use by locals. They form the southern end and high point of the Mid Cheshire Ridge, which runs broadly northâ€”south through Cheshire from Beacon Hill near Frodsham. The two hills are separated by a valley through which the A runs. The southmost high point is in the foreground, with the northmost high point behind left The ridge is formed from a sandstone outcrop of the Sherwood Sandstone Group , dating from the Early Triassic period around million years ago. The sandstones are exposed forming extensive crags on the west flank of the northerly hill, as well as in smaller areas of the southerly hill. The soil is slightly moist, with a similar moisture level to that of the surrounding area. It also extends over Cuckoo Rock, a lower area to the west of the southern high point, which lies to the south of the hamlet of Brown Knowl. It excludes the southwest of the hill, including part of Hether Wood as well as an area of farmland. Bilberry Vaccinium myrtillus is also widespread, with some patches of bracken Pteridium aquilinum , and less frequently bell heather Erica cinerea , cross leaved heath Erica tetralix and broom Cytisus scoparius. The undergrowth includes heather and bilberry, with patches of broad buckler-fern Dryopteris dilatata. A few plants have since been recorded at Raw Head. Insects found here that are scarce in the UK include the bleached pug Eupithecia expallidata and alder kitten Furcula bicuspis moths, as well as the soldier beetle species Malthus frontalis. Locally scarce insects include the green hairstreak butterfly Callophrys rubi and the common glow-worm Lampyris noctiluca. The buzzard , kestrel and sparrowhawk are common raptors , while merlin and peregrine falcon have been observed more rarely. Strategies used include bracken rolling, clearing birch scrub and removing some older trees from heathland areas. Grazing with cattle is employed in summer. Dead wood forms an important habitat and is retained. The fine-grained red sandstones which predominate in the lower rock levels represent sedimentation from sandy braided rivers , while the conglomerate beds of Delamere Pebbly Sandstone a type of Helsby Sandstone formation which occur in the upper levels represent the deposition of larger particles from coarse-grained braided rivers. The rock was generally well exposed, despite local vegetation cover. No damage to the rocks was apparent from tree growth, and carved graffiti adjacent to the Raw Head summit was localised and superficial. The Sandstone Trail, a long-distance footpath between Frodsham and Whitechurch , runs over the top of the two hills, and there are several other public footpaths and a network of waymarked permissive paths. An easy-access footpath suitable for people of limited mobility runs from this parking area to Maiden Castle. There are no bridleways ; cycling is prohibited and horse riding requires a permit on the land owned by the National Trust. Camping and overnight parking are prohibited.
