Mennonite Immigration to Pennsylvania , on display through March 31, The stories reflect the enrichment brought to communities over centuries by the descendants of immigrants. Their first cousins Christian b. The log and stone house built circa by Christian of Hereford is still standing, on Township Road Macungie address , about a mile north of Seisholtzville Road. It was owned by the Gehman family until No genealogy has been constructed for his family, but it appears he had at least two sons, Christian of Plumstead and Jacob of Springfield Some descendants of the Bucks County branch spell their name Gahman. He was a preacher in the Upper Milford Mennonite congregation. The Hereford and Upper Milford communities have always been close and interrelated, despite being separated by the Berks-Lehigh county line. Gehman was a preacher in the Hereford congregation, and he left a diary and other family papers that are now at the Mennonite Heritage Center more on that below. John Gehman Stauffer entered the offices of the Mennonitischer Druckverein [Mennonite Printing Union], run by his bishop John Oberholtzer, as an apprentice in After a short apprenticeship of six months, Stauffer was appointed foreman of the shop and eventually purchased the business in Publishing mostly German books and newspapers, he eventually moved the business to Quakertown, and began an English-language newspaper, The Quakertown Free Press, in He sold the paper to an apprentice a few years later, but the Quakertown Free Press continued to be published until The company is remembered today on the pediment of its former office building in central Quakertown. Preachers and missionaries Numerous descendants of the Gehman family have been ministers or missionaries in the Mennonite and Bible Fellowship denominations, as well as other churches. Preacher John of the second generation has been mentioned. His son John followed him as preacher at Upper Milford. Gehman was an early deacon and secretary of the Evangelical Mennonites i. A great-grandson, Solomon B. A cousin, Jacob Gehman – either the son or grandson of immigrant Benedict – was an early minister at Springfield. At Hereford, for twenty-five years in the late 19th century, John L. When the elder Gehman was ordained in , it was by default rather than lot , because the other nominee refused to participate; John Z. Nevertheless, his son and two grandsons were called to ministry, serving as deacons one after another at Bally. Another cousin, William S. Gehman , was more comfortable preaching; so comfortable, in fact, that he was ousted from the Mennonite Church for being too outspoken in support of prayer meetings and evangelical revival. Raised Lutheran, he married a Mennonite woman and joined her church at Upper Milford, where he was nominated for preacher in at the age of Years later, Gehman told fellow minister C. Brunner that bishop John Oberholtzer preferred the other nominee, year-old Samuel Stauffer. Gehman , was an equally strong leader, serving for many years as presiding elder of the Mennonite Brethren in Christ, Pennsylvania Conference and president of its evangelistic auxiliary, the Gospel Herald Society. While there, she lived through the siege of the town by enraged local Turks, and she sent news dispatches that were published in the New York Times. Her account of the atrocities committed that year against the Armenian minority were later published under the title Hadjin and the Armenian Massacres New York: William Gehman and granddaughter Rose Lambert This barely scratches the surface of Gehman family stories about Christian service. Additional 20th century stories could be told of Ernest G. Gehman , a Mennonite preacher and professor at Eastern Mennonite College, who published cartoons lambasting liberal and modernist influences in the church, or Johanna K. Gehman, donated a wonderful collection of family papers to the MHC when it opened in The papers were found in the attic of an old Gehman farmhouse in Upper Hanover Township, and include records as early as from the family of John Z. Gehman, the Bally preacher. From a cousin, Melvin S. Gehman, in and came several large pieces of fraktur created by or for John Z. The colorful birth certificate of his wife, Mary Latshaw Gehman , was donated by another cousin, Lydia G.
