The primary source for career information is, of course, the natal birth chart. We begin our evaluation with the karmic considerations found in the chart, as well as energetic restrictions indicated by planet placement and geometry. In many cases, one is attracted to a career in order to strengthen a weakness or to satisfy an obsession. Once the challenge is overcome, one can move on to a more rewarding and enjoyable career path. The latter is a true waste of time, as one is simply repeating some trait subconsciously programmed as a result of past life residue. Obviously, there is little to gain from repeating such programming and a Destiny reading can provide important clues to recognizing such patterns. There are exceptions in regards to past life programming. Although rare, the position of the planets by house and sign, and the relationship to karmic influences indicate a continuation of previous, interrupted efforts to complete certain cumulative efforts. Examples of this include child prodigies in the arts, science and more esoteric, spiritual pursuits. Although there may be the continuation of a life theme, the lessons learned from the new timeline, however, must be recognized and mastered in this life scenario. The next major indicators to consider in a chart are found in the geometry created by the angular relationships of the planets. Analysis of the planetary geometry is refined by considering which planetary influences comprise each geometric formation. Here, the chart "speaks" quite specifically regarding the quality and strength of certain talents. The overall balance of the planets involved in multiple angular formations reveals a theme which narrows the list of professions to a realistic choice assuring a high degree of success when efforts are made to attain a career in said areas. This requires a very different approach than the typical "personality" profile. The results are quite revealing. When one is aware of their true "Talents and Powers," a far more accurate course of action can be mapped. Here, many discover talents of which they were not aware. At any rate, this knowledge is indispensable when formulating a career plan. It is truly surprising how many souls have missed the boat, as it were, toiling in an area of life in which their true strengths are diminished rather than enhanced. Here we simply take the natal chart and advance it one day for every year. While the reasons for the efficacy of this technique remain, for the most part, a mystery, astrologers of all ages have come to respect its predictive nature in terms of future trends and influences upon the entity in question for the long term. With a progressed chart, we can see which "Talents and Powers" found in the natal chart will increase or diminish over time. The progressed chart can also reveal a change in direction. With the above knowledge as the foundation upon which to build a coherent plan of action with the highest probable degree of success, we turn to a different set of charts which help us in the practical, day-to-day decisions which we must face, such as deciding "when" to embark on specific actions. We need only to remember that the official beginning of any major event, whether it be a new job, a marriage, a first date, etc. Thus, when we embark on any new endeavor, we are literally surfing a time-wave and, as any surfer will tell you, there are good waves and not so good waves to ride. From another view, we have also heard the phrase, "timing is everything," and everyone has witnessed, at one time or another, the seeming inequity of a choice job falling to the undeserving or ill-equipped. Either way, one is not maximizing the potential of the moment. At worst, bad timing can actually set up a traumatic circumstance. Choosing a good day to initiate an important endeavor is one of the oldest practical uses of astrology. There is no doubt that those who avail themselves of this special knowledge have the advantage gained by maximizing the timing and momentum of certain quantitative and qualitative energy fields. Although circumstances do not always permit. The third and final consideration we will touch upon in this contemplation is that of relationship. As mentioned, the quality of a relationship between any two entities can be ascertained through the proper interpretation of a composite chart, the chart of both parties superimposed and combined into one chart. The angles that form between the planetary alignments of both natal charts give a clear indication of harmonious areas as well as discordant and conflicting areas. It is important to realize that one not only has a relationship with other people, but also of a company, a corporation etc. Here, we find crucial knowledge and insights into the long term results of a relationship and whether it will be mutually complimentary or antagonistic and full of power plays and control issues. The most difficult part of this last technique is acquiring an accurate date of the other party in the relationship. It is interesting to note that the date of birth of the boss or CEO of a company can be quite revealing. Alas, such a date can also prove to be difficult to determine. However, when such dates are available and verifiably accurate, significant insights may be gained into any career endeavor. Clearly, there are many angles from which to view and evaluate a chart for career information. In the most general terms, the techniques used depend upon the time-frame one is interested in. Understand, the use of transits to "tell the future" is an debilitating notion. Transits gives us only the keys to probable outcomes for a given set of parameters. For example, there are good times to ask for that raise and there other times when the resonant energy fields are blocking the reception to such an idea -- this has been proven through very sophisticated, statistical analysis. It is always recommended that one start with a foundation of some type of life reading. I have developed what I term the Destiny reading which includes all of the information needed to make an intelligent career choice. After one grasps this basic profile, one can use the more immediate advantages of critical timing of events for which the astrology of transits is particularly adept. Of course, this asking a bit much for most job offerings. It is important not to confuse a job with a career. The former is generally a stepping stone to the latter. Thus, a career is a general category which each job description supports or destroys to one degree or another. As always, "know thyself," is where the primary emphasis should be. Then, one can make sense of information regarding the "outside world," which translates into environmental factors and the combined Astro-Psychology of multiple individuals as a, shall we say, system dynamic affecting the individual responses. To use a familiar analogy, we are simply learning about the type of ship we have and setting an appropriate course to maximize its true purpose.

He has dealt with such diverse subjects as archaeology and ancient Earth history, the Federal Reserve System, terrorism, internal subversion, the history of taxation, U. David has over 15 years of dedicated experience and understanding of the inner workings, the delicate chemistry, and hardcore mechanics of the human body and how the body is affected by the modern-day stressors. Through his down-to-earth and simple approach, David shows us that no problem is created without a solution and that we DO have the opportunity, right at our fingertips, to make new choices about our lifestyle and take our health back into the power of our own hands. David Wolfe is also the President and Founder of The Fruit Tree Planting Foundation, a non-profit organization with a mission to plant 18 billion fruit trees on planet Earth. Fresco has worked as both designer and inventor in a great variety of fields, ranging from biomedical innovations to totally integrated social systems. Jacques is also known for his Designs and Inventions - many of which have been patented and have had wide commercial acceptance. It is a global vision of hope for the future of humanity in our technological age. Jonathan Quintin - The quest of New Zealand artist and cosmologist Jonathan Quintin is to provide various modalities that help attune human consciousness to the harmony of universal order. He shows how the shapes, patterns and forms of sacred geometry are harmonic keys that can help align mind-body-spirit in a state of higher consciousness. Jonathan demonstrates how sacred geometry is a bridge between the seen and unseen, the quantitative and qualitative, the finite and infinite. He shows how it is a universal language that describes the inner workings of nature and the intrinsic order of the universe; how it is the natural sanction that unites all forms of life: It is a perfect synthesis of all the sciences, philosophies, psychologies and spiritualities. He is noted for his discovery of "The Law of Repeatlessness", yet more over for his subsequent applications of that law in modern thought, psychology, philosophy, spirituality and quantum physics. Joe is inspired by the process of an ever-renewable life, one of new beginnings rather than the inevitable product of our past. With his doctoral degree in philosophy, he has spent his entire life as a student and teacher. He is now considered to be and is sought after as an expert in the biochemistry of psychology and perception, the neurology of spirituality, the biochemistry of nutrition and the synthesis of quantum physics and astrophysics into spirituality. He considers himself a "Wholosopher" whole-osopher. He firmly believes in and teaches Wholosophy, which is the incorporation and integration of every aspect of our perception of existence into the whole of who we are. Doctor of Divinity, Diplomat of American Board of Integrative Holistic Medicine, Diplomat Ayurveda, visionary mystic, physician of the soul, and founder and director of The Tree of Life Rejuvenation Center and Tree of Life Foundation, is a leading author, world renowned spiritual teacher, expert in raw and living foods nutrition, and researcher on the healing of diabetes naturally, depression, manic depression, and some forms of psychosis. Nassim Hamein has spent most of his life researching the fundamental geometry of hyperspace, studying a variety of fields from theoretical physics, cosmology, quantum mechanics, biology and chemistry to anthropology and ancient civilizations. Combining this knowledge with a keen observation of the behavior of nature, he discovered a specific geometric array that he found to be fundamental to creation, and the foundation for his Unified Field Theory emerged. In the past 20 years, Mr. Hamein has directed research teams of physicists, electrical engineers, mathematicians and other scientists. He has founded a non-profit organization, the Resonance Project Foundation, where, as the Director of Research, he continues exploring unification principles and their implications in our world today. On The Principles Of Astrology? Falone "We Are Children Of The Stars; and by them we shall find our way home" jff Currently, there are over thirty astrological systems in use, about a dozen of which have gained the most popularity among astrologers. No doubt, you have encountered systems such as Vedic, Chinese, Esoteric, Karmic and the most popular standard, Western astrology. This mind boggling array of systems, and methodologies within those systems, would lead most people to conclude that astrologers are at odds on most every count. If they were so divided, however, astrology would have disintegrated long ago. There is ample geologic evidence found painted on cave walls carbon dated 36, to 52, BC. We have an unbroken historical record of astrology from Babylonian times with absolute dates ranging to 4, BC. What other form of science has survived millennia virtually intact? From this we can see that there is some very powerful glue that binds the many systems, techniques and methodologies of all astrological disciplines. Such a binding force can be found in the very essential principles of astrology. These principles are made up of the Zodiac, a wheel comprised of 12 constellations and the planetary bodies that were added to the system as they were discovered. They now number 12 when the Nodes are calculated. The basic principles of astrology for the last 4, years have proven to be virtually invincible. From this granite foundation of knowledge, every conceivable spin off has been attempted, some better than others. It is not within the scope of this introductory document to expound upon the principles for they are many and their explanations are a deep subject. Suffice it to say that astrology is founded upon sound principles that have stood the test of time and millions upon millions of charts successfully used to plot the celestial blueprints of the human condition, its trials and its fortunes. However, we can elucidate some aspects of this subject. The principles of astrology are based upon a fundamental set of symbols that represent every major area of life, the cyclical patterns of which are designated by observable, celestial markers. These markers are comprised of essentially 12 constellations and 12 planets if one counts the moon nodes. The following is a very brief foray into the structure and quality of the housing system. Then we will look briefly at the planetary meanings that overlay and mix, as it were, the same essential ingredients or qualities moving through the housing system. The 12 houses used by the majority of astrologers is quite familiar to most casual observers and is called the Zodiac. Astrologers needed to locate the movement of the planets. To do this, they needed a fixed set of markers against which the relatively rapid planetary movement could be tracked. Why are there not degrees in a circle? Because ancient astrologers knew the Earth returned to the same position in its orbit in approximately days. Why are there 12 houses of 30 degrees each and not 10 houses of 36 degrees? Because the Moon cycles repeat 12 times in the Solar count. Most of us are aware of the fact that there are hundreds of constellations, the grouping of which are debatable to be sure. So why did astrologers choose the twelve constellations they now use. It was the mathematics of proportions described above that narrowed the field of view to fit the 12 sectors of 30 degrees. The plane of the ecliptic further defined that field of view once astrologers determined that the planets had a narrow range of movement in the latitudes or what we term the declinations. Remember, the purpose of the fixed stars is a backdrop against which to locate the moving planets. Now that the celestial sky was divided into 12 sectors of 30 degrees and narrowed by the plane of the ecliptic, it was a matter of choosing what fit into that mathematical scheme. The question may be asked: If the constellations were chosen by convenience, then how can astrologers claim that these constellations are a factor in their science of human psychology and prediction? The answer is simply in the cyclical stages of life. Just as the fetus develops from an egg, progressing through recognizable stages known as "phylogeny recapitulates ontogeny," so too, once you identify the stage of development of a system at any point, the rest will follow. We do not have to know why, we just have to know the cyclical process of life. Thus the "signs" explain a sequential process of life in a recognizable pattern. Thus, life on earth has seasons of growth and return to seed and everything in between. It did not really matter what system was used, it is the predictable recognition of the cycles of life that form the glue that binds all basic astrology. The next consideration is the use of the planets. Once the backdrop was fixed and ordered into a clock representing the movements of Earth, astrologers now had a way to accurately locate the planets within the celestial clock comprised of phases of human experience. Since the 12 constellations marked every phase of the human experience, it could hardly be expected that the planets would signify something other than what the "Signs" would designate. Therefore, each planet and its cyclical movement was scrutinized based upon a corollary of the type of human drama and the position of the planet in the backdrop of the Zodiac dial. Things began to get really interesting. Each planet, through millions of hours of observation were meticulously plotted as to the position and quality of influence. Over time, it was determined which planet was affiliated with which phase of the life cycle already determined by the housing system. For example, it was determined that Mercury governed the mind and communication as does the 3rd House of Gemini in the Zodiac. Therefore, each planet was noted as having an energy that resonated with each phase of a corresponding constellation. So astrologers agreed that a planet sharing or signifying the qualities of the same phase of life as a constellation would "Rule" that sign. The planet rules the sign rather than vice versa because the planets move and motion has power in this dimension. To a skilled astrologer, this was celestial artistry whereby the Zodiac was the Palette of colors and the Planets, the grand brushes that would mix and blend the colors of life to create a picture of the innate qualities of a soul born into that celestial painting. The system described above revealed amazing predictive powers to an accomplished astrologer. However, human nature was still far deeper and more complex than 12 signs and a handful of planets could explain in detail. Astrologers wanted to know more, they wanted more detail, more resolution, as it were. They were soon to discover exactly what they hoped for. As they built their body of observed knowledge, a most remarkable pattern began to emerge from the charts they used to note the positions of the planets. Astrologers began to see angular relationships between the planets. Moreover, the laws of geometry in physics applied to the laws of consciousness on this plane. Therefore, two planets, degrees from each other formed a part of an equilateral TRI angle or a Trine angle. This is the strongest of angles in physics and in astrology. One builds the strongest bridges using this angle. Eventually, it was recognized by astrologers of all systems that the angles that the planets formed on the day of a birth or the day of a battle, or of a royal visit, would yield powerful, accurate data. It was seen that planets in opposition to each other and square to each other caused great stress and obstacles to overcome. We will leave this chapter at this point for we have accomplished our goal in discussing the basics of astrology that most all astrologers agree upon. After that, things are not so simple and agreement of the details of the many systems are encountered with less frequency. However, the foundation herein discussed is broad and deep. It is the glue that binds, the foundation of empirical knowledge and the reason why the science of astrology has survived for thousands of years. These fundamental associations cannot be disputed and, as such, form the principles that unite all astrologers.
