*The Gruffalo (Picture Books) [Julia Donaldson, Axel Scheffler] on www.enganchecubano.com FREE shipping on qualifying offers. A mouse is taking a stroll through the deep, dark wood when along comes a hungry fox, then an owl, and then a snake.*

A fox saw the mouse and the mouse looked good. Come and have lunch in my underground house. But our perky, brave little mouse is very quick-thinking: The mouse however, calmly carries on on his way. In time he meets several other dangerous animals; a fox, an owl, and a snake. Each one whom he meets, clearly intends to eat the mouse, and invites him back to their home, ostensibly for a meal. But every time, the mouse claims he is expected by the fierce gruffalo to his house for a meal instead. We might also have felt as apprehensive and scared as the animals who want to eat the mouse. My little friend was giggling as much as I was, because: As large as life and twice as ugly: He seems to be half a grizzly bear and half a buffalo. And when he spots the mouse: The gruffalo is very doubtful of this, but humours the mouse, and accompanies him through the forest. Then the two of them once again encounter all the animals the mouse had met before. Then, in the final double spread: The mouse found a nut and the nut was good. Julia Donaldson seems to understand children completely, from the inside. She says that this story was inspired by a Chinese tale about a clever girl who tricks a hungry tiger into believing she is the Queen of the Jungle and scares him away. Julia Donaldson knew that this would make a great picture book for children between about three and seven years of age, but she wanted to do it in rhyme. We know what is coming, but each time there is a little thrill of surprise to make us laugh. The book is about words long, and much of its charm also lies in the illustrations by Axel Scheffler. He also wondered about making the animals wear clothes, but in the end decided against it. My little Turkish neighbour, aged just four, and I both giggled and one of us squealed a bit at this delightful picture book. After all, how terrifying might that one be?

2: The Gruffalo - Wikipedia

The Gruffalo, one of Julia Donaldson's first children's books, is also one of her most popular children's picture books. Others include Room on the Broom, Stick Man, The Snail and the Whale and What the Ladybird Heard.

The minute animation, first broadcast at Christmas, is excellent. It really sticks to the book – I only wish more TV programs would! The language is very carefully thought out - each page is beautifully simple, and so easy to read aloud with feeling. The theme of fear is gently developed, and cleverly dissipated with humour: Your son or daughter will soon be quoting some of the best lines: It has just the right amounts of silly, scary, and adventure. The timing and cadence make it fun to read aloud. I highly recommend this for kids ages 5–8. It is a brilliantly written rhyming story, with repetition and has a great deal of expression within the speech. Until he comes across a real gruffalo and goes on to show the gruffalo that he, the mouse, is the scariest creature in the wood. This is a funny book which will appeal to children of all ages and I think that adults will enjoy reading it to them. From looking at the book, you may think that children will be frightened of the monster, the gruffalo, but it is very well written so that the gruffalo is in fact not a scary character, and is scared of the mouse in the end! The illustrations in the book go with the written text brilliantly and really set the story alive for children who enjoy looking at pictures to accompany their imagination. The language used in the book is suitable for children as young as 2 to understand and is appropriate for primary school children to read aloud. As well as this book being a great asset in a classroom for literacy, it provides many other cross-curricular benefits as children could use it as the basis of a drama activity, or as part of an art lesson where children can create their own monsters. Although this book is suitable for children from 2 to 8, I think it would be particularly useful for children in Foundation stage or Year 1 introducing them to rhyming books and enabling them to relate to characters in stories providing many reading and writing opportunities. One of many fantastic books by Julia Donaldson! The wood is brought to life by a little mouse who takes a stroll through the deep dark woods; along the way he meets many dangerous creatures whom he scares off by the creation of an imaginary creature. It is very colourful and the pages are brought to life by the fantastic illustrations of Axel Scheffler. There are lots of online resources available to support this book. The book is written by Julia Donaldson and accompanied with illustration by Axel Scheffler. His illustrations are lively, colourful and help the subject of the story to not be intimidating to younger children in any way. During his journey he encounters many predators intent on eating him; however, the mouse uses cunning to scare them away. The dominant theme in the book is the moral of the smallest using intelligence to overcome the brawny and intimidating; a lesson children of all ages can relate to. Rhyme is used consistently and repetition frequently by Donaldson. These features make the book wonderful to read with younger children as the rhyme and repetition make it very memorable. For older children, techniques such as alliteration and assonance are introduced. The book could be highly beneficial as an educational tool, predominantly in the foundation stages and key stage one. The woodland setting of the book could encourage lessons on nature where children could even create their own Gruffalo forest in outside areas of a school. The pictures make the book accessible to children to read without being literate as the pictures follow the written parts of the story accurately. The illustrations also allow young children to use their imagination, this could be developed into an art class, designing their own Gruffalo or simply painting him. Along his way he meets several animals who also invite him for lunch. After the mouse explains that he already has plans he describes to each of them who the Gruffalo is and what he looks like. The story has fantastic illustrations in which children thoroughly enjoy looking at. The book uses lots of repetition that engages and includes the children in storytelling. The book can be used as a basis for a class topic in which children are able to think up their own descriptions of the Gruffalo, discuss the animals used and create their own storyboard to show their interpretations of the narrative. A fox saw the mouse and the mouse looked good. The imagination of Donaldson is captured with the descriptive words, amazing pictures, bright and colourful. The expression of the animals helps the reader to relate to the characters in the book and imagine how they are feeling. Rhyme and verse are used in this book helping children to familiarise themselves with this style. What an amazing book this is! This book contains the mouse as the main character who meets a range of other interesting animals during his stroll through the forest. Unfortunately, these greedy animals wanted to devour the poor harmless mouse. However, this clever mouse told them there was a vicious Gruffalo whos favourite food was a meal containing that particular animal. Unexpectantly, the mouse did finally meet the Gruffalo and told him that his favourite food was Gruffalo Crumble. This outstanding picture book is ideal for younger children but is also fun to share with the whole family. Written by Archerfish class. The Gruffalo is a very funny book for children of all ages and adults alike. It is the tale of little versus big and how clever the mouse was in being able to outwit such a huge creature as the Gruffalo. It is extremely funny especially when the mouse eventually meets the Gruffalo and has to trick him into letting him live. The story has great rhythm and rhyme and this allows young children to predict the rhyming couplet words that come next. Additionally, the illustrations are beautiful and will keep even non readers mesmerised. All in all, this book is one that people will remember for the rest of their lives. Written by the Angelfish class.

Since then, Donaldson-Scheffler fans have been able to play a game of spot the gruffalo: The book has become a classic. The details of how it came to be are becoming the stuff of publishing legend: Since then her work rate has been phenomenal. She has published more than 20 books, about half of them with Scheffler. At any one time she has several works in progress: It was, I have to admit "not in a really horrible way" this thing of, no one realises, but I am just wonderful. We had bunk beds and we had this furry dog with a burnt nose called Maflinda, and I would make her do shows, and my father would be playing [string] quartets next door. So I would dangle Maflinda down from the top bunk and she would dance. They travelled around Europe, busking, and she began writing down her songs. She also wrote two musicals and an operetta telling the story of their romance, which they performed at their wedding reception. Donaldson was 29 when Hamish, the first of three sons, was born. She began working for educational publishers, writing "plays and retellings of folk tales and things". Her son Hamish grew from an imaginative but complicated child into a disturbed adolescent, finally being diagnosed with schizoaffective disorder. He suffered episodes of depression and psychosis and, in , took his life, aged But her tears are close to the surface. She believes she had trouble getting published in the first place because the fashion then was for prose and sentiment. Although she has stopped looking for direct inspiration from folk tales and fables, their universal and mythic quality is what she aspires to recreate. The point of a story, whether for adults or children, is that it takes you away from your ordinary experience and on an adventure. Above all, it should have a good plot. His book Mouse Soup could be viewed as a kind of inspiration for The Gruffalo as it too features a predator outwitted, albeit via different means, by a mouse. I wish he was better known here. It was too much. Not just fighting, but Hamish in particular used to play with sticks when we were living in France.

Use the cards to play Go Fish, but rather than ask the name of the animal pictured, have each player describe the picture instead. Use the cards to talk about how things are similar and different. We did this with several of the pairs. For example, there are a few different sets of birds, but they are all different. Great opportunity to talk about how they are different. You can use these cards in any of the games mentioned to also target articulation, fluency, and other language goals as needed. The set comes with 40 cards, or 20 sets. That is a lot for a young child in a memory game. We started with just 20 cards, all of which were very different i. Gruffalo Finger Puppets Oh how I love finger puppets. Here are some ideas to get you started: This targets sequencing, recall of information, vocabulary, grammar, fluency and can be used to target articulation as well.
