The Hidden Pool is a short, breezy read about a friendship between three boys from very different backgrounds, and like all of Bond's tales, it is refreshing in its originality and sincerity. Unconsciously, I was reminiscing about my own childhood friends, and that's what Ruskin Bond does. Been on a Ruskin Bond reading spree today, and it's been.

His father taught English to the princesses of Jamnagar palace and Ruskin and his sister Ellen lived there till he was six. Shortly after that he was sent to a boarding school in Mussourie. When Bond was eight years old, his mother separated from his father and married a Punjabi Hindu, Hari. His father arranged for Ruskin to be brought to New Delhi where he was posted. He was very close to his father and describes this period with his father as one of the happiest times of his life. When he was ten, his father died of malaria, while he was posted in Calcutta. Ruskin was at his boarding school in Shimla and was informed about this tragedy by his teacher. He was thoroughly heartbroken. Later, he was raised by his mother and stepfather who lived in Dehradun. He did his schooling from Bishop Cotton School in Shimla, from where he graduated in 1941. He wrote one of his first short stories, "Untouchable", at the age of sixteen in 1941. In London, he started writing his first novel, The Room on the Roof, the semi-autobiographical story of the orphaned Anglo-Indian boy named Rusty; he did various jobs for a living. He moved to London and worked in a photo studio while searching for a publisher. After getting it published, Bond used the advance money to pay the sea passage to Bombay and settle in Dehradun. On his youth, he said, "Sometimes I got lucky and some [work] got selected and I earned a few hundred rupees. He edited a magazine for four years. In the 1950s, Penguin set up in India and approached him to write some books. These two novels were published in one volume by Penguin India in 1951. Since then he has written over five hundred short stories, essays and novels, including [The Blue Umbrella], Funny Side Up, A Flight of Pigeons and more than 50 books for children. He has also published his autobiography: The Lamp is Lit is a collection of essays and episodes from his journal. I started at the age of 17 or 18 and I am still writing. If I were not a professional writer who was getting published I would still write. Religion did not make me one. He also has a brother, William who lives in Canada. His Autobiography, "Lone Fox Dancing", was published in Literary style Most of his works are influenced by life in the hill stations at the foothills of the Himalayas, where he spent his childhood. His first novel, The Room On the Roof, was written when he was 17 and published when he was 18. It was partly based on his experiences at Dehradun, in his small rented room on the roof, and his friends. His earlier works were written without it being meant for any particular readership. Later, he tried out non-fiction, romance [4] and books for children. He said his favourite genres are essays and short stories. For an essay or travelogue, such planning is not needed for him. He feels the unexpected there makes it more exciting. It was produced by Shashi Kapoor and directed by Shyam Benegal. In 1998, the Bollywood director Vishal Bhardwaj made a film based on his popular novel for children, The Blue Umbrella. Bond appears as a Bishop in the movie with Priyanka Chopra playing the title role.

He is very lonely and sad and even though he lives with his guardian Mr. Rusty is going through several emotions: He is obliged to follow the orders and rules of his guardian and dares not disobey him. He feels helpless because he knows that if he disobeys Mr. John, he will get caned. John thinks that Indians are very dirty and this story is written just after the British had ruled over India, so he must have felt more superior! One day, Rusty decides to get some fresh air and takes a walk while his guardian was away in Delhi. After walking through the forest, he stops in front of the bazaar and his mind is arguing with his instinct. You will get into trouble. But his instinct is saying, Go! You have your own heart and mind. Rusty chooses to follow his instinct and steps into the bazaar. He has made a good choice. When Rusty returns home, he finds that his guardian has returned early and gets caned for going to the bazaar. The next day, he goes to play Holi with Ranbir and once again gets caned. Rusty now knows what he has to do. Rusty finds Somi who supports him a lot. Slowly, from a confused boy, Rusty turns into a confident and independent young man! He gets a job teaching English to a boy named Kishen, in return for a tiny room on the roof and food. The story takes a turn, when he loses all his friends and his first love too. Rusty spends his sad days looking out at the window and once again, plans to run away. He decides to go back to England but before doing so, he wants to say a last goodbye to his friends and finds Kishen who convinces him to change his mind about returning to the UK. Instead, the two walk away together to form their own new world and life without worrying about anything else. What I like about the book: The author was seventeen when he wrote this and the story was inspired by his own experiences when he lived in Dehra. He wrote this story because he too was feeling some of the emotions that Rusty was feeling in the story. And for that reason, he decided that he would never make any revisions so readers could understand how it feels to be seventeen. It was a great read because it has a lot of different emotions and I like the way Ruskin Bond has written it: There were a few funny descriptions, such as when Ruskin Bond described a situation as: Here are some books I am interested in reading from his collection: I think the author has explained an important message in this book. I think if people live in a country, they should mix with the people and appreciate their culture. The lesson in this story for me is to remain open as Rusty was and to follow my instincts. If Rusty had not become friends with the people of the bazaar he would never have had all the wonderful experiences in the story. Ruskin Bond reminds me of Roald Dahl because they both use interesting language and really funny phrases to describe their characters and their stories. They both write simple but wonderful stories. Baldeo the watchman was responsible for signaling whether or not the tunnel was clear of obstruction, at night it was his duty to see that the lamp was burning, and that the overland mail passed through safely. Tembu, the boy lay in the station. They lived in a small tribal village on the outskirts of the forest, about three miles from the station. Their small rice fields did not provide them with more than a bare living, and Baldeo considered himself lucky to have got the job of Khalasi at this small wayside signal stop. The signal light was out. Baldeo set to work on haul the lamp down by its chain. If the oil had finished, he would have to return to the hut for more. The mail train was due in five minutes; having made sure that the line was clear, he returned to the entrance and sat down to wait for the mail train. Baldeo heard an animal sound, listening as he had never listened before, wondered if it was making for the tunnel or the opposite direction-the direction of the hut, in which Tembu would be lying unprotected. Before a minute had passed he made out the huge body of the tiger trotting steadily towards him. Baldeo and the tiger fought but although he injured the tiger, Baldeo was unfortunately killed. The overland mail was now approaching. The tiger raised its head, then slowly got to its feet. It found itself trapped like Baldeo. Flight along the cutting was impossible. It entered the tunnel, running as fast as its wounded leg would carry it. At the next station the driver slowed down and stopped his train to water the engine. Above the cowcatcher lay the major portion of the tiger, cut the half by the engine. There was considerable excitement and conjecture at the station, but back at the cutting there was no sound except for the sobs of the boy as he sat beside the body of his father. Tembu and his sister and mother were plunged in grief for two whole days; but life had to go on, and a living had to be made, and all the responsibility now fell on Tembu. Three nights later, he was at the cutting, lighting the signal lamp for the overland mail. Baldeo the watchman was responsible for signalling whether or not the tunnel was clear of obstruction, at night it was his duty to see that the lamp was burning, and that the overland mail passed through safely. Arun lived in a 12x7 feet room on 1st floor of a building. He had nothing to do rather than writing books in Hindi, Urdu and English. In dull and dusty Pipalnagar, each day is like another, there is resignation but not despair. Even the dreams here are small: Deep Chand, the barber, will open a more up-to-date salon where he might, perhaps, give the Prime Minister a haircut; Pitamber will trade his cycle-rickshaw for the less demanding scooter-rickshaw; Aziz will be happy with a junk-shop in Chandni Chowk. Aside from them Arun thought of once writing a blockbuster and will take an express train from Pipalnagar to Delhi. He always has sought reassurance in love: He always thought, "My publisher has always given me ideas for how to make money but
