While recently in Hong Kong for a reunion of former correspondents, the territory seemed much the same as we had first found it in the s, a robust place where assertive southern Chinese.

They do that through several scientific, artistic and social programs, like RoboCode or ArtCrafters. It is no surprise that chess found its way to fit in this environment. SmarTone, a large telecommunications company sponsored the event. They provided awards and helped the organizers present the most important games in two electronical DGT boards. First steps in pawn structures Understanding how to use pawns and how to handle different pawn structures are important topics for young or improving players to consider. Not often kids get to play on DGT boards Photo: Official website The kids were divided in four sections and played six rounds of minute games. Winners were declared in every age group from 5-year-olds up to year-olds. All four divisions also had individual and team winners. Active chess followers are well aware of the benefits of chess in education. In countries like Armenia or Spain chess is already an established fixture in educational curricula. For many parents throughout the world this is not an obvious fact, however. It has been proven that playing chess is very beneficial to children. It can stimulate their logical thinking skills and the capacity for concentration. Their ability to solve problems and their analytical capacity can also be enhanced by playing chess. You realize this in striking clarity once you obtain a won endgame but in the end have to be content with a draw in the end because of a lack of necessary know-how. Such accidents can only be prevented by building up a solid endgame technique. The first part of his training series can be started without any endgame knowledge, only a knowledge of the rules of chess is assumed. They learn and have fun at the same time Photo: Official website Concentration Photo: Official website Grace So, a civil engineer, is the founder of ActiveKids. With the company, she is trying to fill a gap in the educational system: Thus, I realized then that there was a big gap between what children needed and available high quality extracurricular activities".
