1: The Global Evolution of Industrial Relations

The Global Evolution of Industrial Relations by Bruce E. Kaufman, , International Labour Office edition, in English.

Zealandia and Australia together are part of the wider regions known as Oceania and Australasia. The first voyage is shown in red, second voyage in green, and third voyage in blue. The first European landing on the Australian continent occurred in the Janszoon voyage of 1605. The first voyage of James Cook stands as significant for the circumnavigation of New Zealand in 1770 and as the European discovery and first ever coastal navigation of Eastern Australia from April to August 1770. In particular, South Australia was founded and settled in a similar manner to New Zealand, both being influenced by the ideas of Edward Gibbon Wakefield. Whereas Maori iwi endured the Musket Wars of the period 1660-1840 preceding the former in New Zealand, indigenous Australians have no comparable period of the experience of warfare amongst each other employing European-introduced modern weaponry either before or after their own confrontations with European settler society. New Zealand participated as a member of the Federal Council of Australasia from 1885 and fully involved itself among the other self-governing colonies in the conference and Convention leading up to Federation of Australia. Ultimately it declined to accept the invitation to join the Commonwealth of Australia resultingly formed in 1901, remaining as a self-governing colony until becoming the Dominion of New Zealand in 1947 and with other territories later constituting the Realm of New Zealand effectively as an independent country of its own. In the Olympics 1908, the Festival of Empire and the Olympics the two countries were represented at least in sporting competition as the unified entity "Australasia". Both continued to co-operate politically in the 20th century as each sought closer relations with the United Kingdom, particularly in the area of trade. This was helped by the development of refrigerated shipping, which allowed New Zealand in particular to base its economy on the export of meat and dairy - both of which Australia had in abundance - to Britain. The two nations sealed the Canberra Pact in January 1944 for the purpose of successfully prosecuting war against the Axis Powers in World War II and providing for the administration of an armistice and territorial trusteeship in its aftermath. The Agreement foreshadowed the establishment of a permanent Australia-New Zealand Secretariat, it provided for consultation in matters of common interest, it provided for the maintenance of separate military commands and for "the maximum degree of unity in the presentation. This was partially a result of Britain joining the European Economic Community in the early 1970s, thus restricting the access of both countries to their biggest export market. The expedition was sent by Governor Bourke from Sydney and was subsequently criticised for use of excessive force by a British House of Commons report in 1845. Promised settlement on confiscated land, more than 1000 Australians were recruited. Other Australians became scouts in the Company of Forest Rangers. Independent of the sense of Empire or Commonwealth, both nations in the second half of the twentieth century otherwise provided contingents in support of United States strategic aims in the Korean War, Vietnam War, and Gulf War. Together Australia and New Zealand saw their first major military action in the Battle of Gallipoli, in which both suffered major casualties. For many decades the battle was seen by both countries as the moment at which they came of age as nations. Canberra memorial World War II was a major turning point for both countries, as they realised that they could no longer rely on the protection of Britain. Subsequently, both countries sought closer ties with the United States. Although no such attack occurred until, arguably, 11 September, Australia and New Zealand both contributed troops to the Korean and Vietnam Wars. An Australian flag flies atop the eastern pylon and a New Zealand flag flies atop the western pylon. A bronze memorial statue of a digger holding a Lee-Enfield rifle pointing down was placed on the western end of the bridge on Anzac Day in 1951. The memorial commemorates the shared effort to achieve common goals in both peace and war. Since 1949, Australia, and since 1947, New Zealand have been parties to the ABCA interoperability arrangement of national defence forces. The SEATO anti-communist defence organisation also extended membership to both countries for the duration of its existence from 1954 to 1975. Both expeditions reported voluminously. Guy Menzies then completed solo crossing in 1931. Rowing crossing was first

This landmark volume chronicles the history and practice of industrial relations to date. It focuses on the largely untold story of how the globalization of industrial relations took hold and explores in depth the pivotal events, idea, and people behind it.

They are called hybrid because they combine democratic traits e. To better understand this vast grey zone of institutional ambiguities, Typologies have been created in order to identify various institutional arrangements of hybrid regimes and how they differ from other types of regimes. The current annotated bibliography of literature on hybrid regime trajectories points to a logical sequence of scientific inquiry in the following three domains: It is supported with proposed key readings for each. Also included are datasets, major journals, and university presses on the subject. The selection was largely driven by the criteria of originality and potential for generalization, leaving aside the question of iterated testing and idiographic research. The crosscutting from literature on authoritarian to democratic regimes is what makes hybrid regimes such a dynamic subject for generating new insights and innovative thinking toward a better understanding of political regimes in developing countries. The influential work Finer, a comparative analysis of political regimes around the world, is essential to any students in the field. Almond and Coleman focuses on developing countries, Collier depicts the specifics of Latin American regimes, and Zolberg those of West Africa. Linz, originally published in , outlines types of nondemocratic regimes, and the same can be said about Perlmutter. Huntington and Moore addresses the issue of single-party regimes. In doing so, without using the name, their works are precursors of the studies on hybrid regimes. The Politics of the Developing Areas. Princeton University Press, The New Authoritarianism in Latin America. It is about an authoritarian subtype also present in other regions such as Asia. Third World states are divided into three categories: The first two are an integral part of the actual lexicon on hybrid regimes. Authoritarian Politics in Modern Society: Within the historical relationship between modernization and institutionalization of the ruling party in authoritarian regimes lies the key link to explaining political stability. Totalitarian and Authoritarian Regimes. A Comparative Institutional Analysis. Yale University Press, Of particular interests are the corporatist and praetorian models, for which the organizational structure and mechanisms of repression are described. The Party-States of West Africa. University of Chicago Press, The argument is twofold. First, ideology is central for achieving unanimity. Second, electoral malpractice and arbitrary use of law help contain dissent.
