Share Program Description They look like dragons and inspire visions of fire-spitting monsters. But these creatures with their long claws, razor-sharp teeth, and muscular, whip-like tails are actually monitors, the largest lizards now walking the planet. With their acute intelligence, monitors—including the largest of all, the Komodo dragon—are a very different kind of reptile, blurring the line between reptiles and mammals. Thriving on Earth essentially unchanged since the time of the dinosaurs, they are a very successful species, versatile at adapting to all kinds of settings. This program looks at what makes these long-tongued reptiles so similar to mammals and what has allowed them to become such unique survivors. On this island, there lives a hunter that smells its prey with its tongue, that will ambush pigs, deer, even people, tearing them apart. Of the almost 5, types of lizard, monitors are the smartest; some can even count. And while they vary in size as much as an elephant and a mouse, they share a distinctive temperament. Monitor lizards are lizards with an attitude. Hungry, sometimes, not for a meal, but a pat or a bath? I dare anybody to go to a major zoo and look a monitor lizard in the eye. Major funding for NOVA is provided by the following: Pacific Life can help provide a dependable income you can enjoy for the rest of your life, because retirement can be a very long ride. Your financial professional can tell you more about Pacific Life. Natural gas is a cleaner burning fuel, yet a lot of natural gas has impurities like CO<sub>2</sub> in it. But no dotting mother attends the new arrivals. They either make it out of their shells or not, either gain mastery of their bodies, or die trying. And die they well might. They have no future in this burrow. Their only chance at survival is to claw their way straight up, through more than three feet of baking sand, to the open air. Here, they must seek cover fast, before adults of their own kind take notice and eat them. But such hardship has molded some extraordinary creatures: Of the nearly 5, types of lizard found today, the monitors are the undisputed kings. Almost half of the monitor species live in Australia. In this desert, one has become top predator, a position usually occupied by mammals. Give them some rays and they have the stamina, speed and smarts of a mammal. But the lizards stand out, giving the region its nickname, "Land of Lizards," and making it the perfect place for lizard hunters. Known as the "Lizard Man," American biologist Dr. Eric Pianka is a world authority on lizard ecology. Red Sands is my favorite place on this earth. Red Sands is teeming with skinks, geckoes and monitor lizards of all sizes. But finding them is no easy task, even for the Lizard Man. Low fences lead the animals into pit traps sunk into the ground. I hope we get something bigger. With these pit traps, Dr. Pianka and his field assistant, Stephen Goodyear, catch many of the smaller ground-dwellers. Twice a day, Eric and Stephen check all of their traps. By logging every lizard species, they try to work out how so many lizards can co-exist. So the real appeal to me is trying to understand the high numbers of species of lizards you find together. I have to know all the players; we have to know their names and what eats what. Not all monitors are as big as perenties, there are little ones too. Now this is a lizard, lizard and a half: For me this is a real trophy. There is a lot of lizard-eating lizards. And the monitor lizards are right at the top. Being top predators, monitor lizards hunt down anything smaller than they are, even their own kin. And in a place too hot and dry for most mammals, these lizards rule. They rival many mammals as cunning hunters. These calculating hunters learn and memorize all the major landmarks around. They read the landscape like a map, taking short cuts to hideouts and ambushing prey to avoid energy-draining chases. When this monitor comes across a hot scent, he follows the trail relentlessly, using special senses that guide him with lethal accuracy. Other animals have passed this way too. Like snakes, monitors have forked tongues. By flicking them in the air or touching the ground, they pick up scents. Every time they pull in their tongues, they read these scents with an organ in the roof of their mouth. He never follows a trail backwards. The snake has one last defense: Being partly solar-powered, reptiles only need 10 percent of the food we mammals need. And if food is scarce, a good meal can last the King for weeks. Back at camp, Eric and Stephen sort through their catch of the day. Eric has been coming here for almost half a century, making his study of the Red Sands lizards unique. On this expedition, Eric hopes to find good lizard numbers, especially monitors. As top predators, their presence or absence will indicate whether the desert community here is still healthy. There, I got it. And soon, Eric will get visitors. And local monitor expert Rex Neindorf has lined up the first grumpy subject. Hey Rex, what have you got for us? This large specimen is used to having people around, making him an ideal test candidate. The next time he sheds his skin, the Velcro fixings will come off. The camera sends live pictures back to a mobile receiver and has a radio tag, so it can be found later. Are you guys happy with that? Okay, I grab him right there. So it looks pretty good. For the first time they see what it sees. To get the best results, Christian and Lucas must now let their subject move out of sight, yet stay close enough to receive the video signal. They can bridge a distance of about a third of a mile, room enough for the Lizard King to roam and give Lizardcam its first hard knocks. What is always important for us is to get the attachment technique right. These cameras should have no effect on the animal whatsoever. And this means the camera should drop off rather than trap its host. The packaging is the hardest thing, because we need a package that is both very rugged—it has to survive in quite a harsh environment—but at the same time it should be light. And, ideally, it can be reused time and time again. And then the King does something rarely seen. Monitors like this one prefer roaming on the ground, or so it was thought. To see this species climbing is a revelation. Lizardcam is already delivering, and, bolstered by their first success, Christian and Lucas try out a more daring design: This time, the star of the show heads off towards a dirt track among sand dunes. Cooked in the sun, the mangled rabbit is irresistible, but how best to carve the roast? So if the meal is too big to be gulped down whole, it has to be torn apart. You have this little video screen in front of you, and what you see is not some piece of recorded footage, but it is an animal behaving, and you are live on the back of a lizard. And that is very exciting. You get this very special point of view, and you also immediately realize the quality of certain discoveries. Basking in the early morning sun is a rarely seen Lizard King. This short-tailed monitor or brevicauda is the smallest monitor in the world. Oh, man, look at that. Look at this savage thing; ahh, ooh, ahh. In contrast to this tiny hunter, in Indonesia, real-life dragons rule entire islands. And they truly are giants. Up to ten feet long and weighing as much as pounds, the largest Komodo dragons are not only the biggest monitors, but also the biggest lizards now walking the planet. They will bring down prey as large as deer and water buffalo and occasionally dine on a human.

They instead instilled discipline and levied punishment by the military tradition known as dressing down. This consisted of yelling at and berating the children until they were reduced to tears and acknowledged their failings. One day, an acquaintance brought over a record thought to have Jim on the cover. He said he could not blame his son for being reluctant to initiate contact and that he was proud of him nonetheless. Throughout his life he had at least several serious, ongoing relationships, and many casual encounters. By many accounts, he could also be inconsistent with his partners, [58] displaying what some recall as "a dual personality". A Jekyll and Hyde. When he was sober, he was Jekyll, the most erudite, balanced, friendly kind of guy. They met while young, when both were attending college, [60] and she encouraged him to develop his poetry. Through to the end, Courson saw Morrison as more than a rock star, but as "a great poet"; she constantly encouraged him and pushed him to write. A number of writers have speculated that songs like "Love Street," "Orange County Suite" and "Queen of the Highway," among other songs, may have been written about her. In a interview with the St. The handfasting ceremony is described in No One Here Gets Out Alive as a "blending of souls on a karmic and cosmic plane. They were really out to put him away. Morrison seemed to be falling apart. He was back with Pam, he was severely alcoholic, and like many she feared he was dying. In letters, he described going for long walks through the city, alone. His death was two years to the day after the death of the Rolling Stones guitarist Brian Jones , and approximately nine months after the deaths of Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin. You know, You know more, than you let on The grave had no official marker until French officials placed a shield over it, which was stolen in The bronze plaque thereon bears the Greek inscription: Nonetheless, he was drawn to the study of literature, poetry, religion, philosophy and psychology , among other fields. These interests appear to be the source of many references to creatures and places such as lizards , snakes, deserts and "ancient lakes" that appear in his songs and poetry. His interpretation and imagination of the practices of Native American ceremonial people which, based on his readings, he referred to by the anthropological term " shamans " influenced his stage routine, notably in seeking trance states and vision through dancing to the point of exhaustion. In the documentary The Doors: Sugerman states that Morrison, as a teenager, was such a fan of Presley that he demanded silence when Elvis was on the radio. Mojo Risin" [] [] , Morrison was, and continues to be, one of the most popular and influential singer-songwriters and iconic frontmen in rock history. To this day Morrison is widely regarded as the prototypical rock star: Hardly anyone noticed that Jim was paraphrasing Rimbaud and the Surrealist poets. Alice Cooper in the liner notes of the album Killer stated that the song "Desperado" is about Jim Morrison.

King Gizzard & the Lizard Wizard is an Australian psychedelic rock band formed in Melbourne, Victoria. The band consists of Stu Mackenzie (vocals, guitar).

Formation [ edit ] The band members all grew up and went to school in the Deniliquin, Melbourne and Geelong areas. The band started off as a group of friends jamming together, before a mutual friend asked them to play at a show. They eventually compromised with King Gizzard and the Lizard Wizard. It is named after Anglesea , the coastal town where Mackenzie grew up, and is currently not available for purchase, physically or digitally. The album was written collaboratively by Smith and Stu Mackenzie. I love bad guys and I love Red Dead Redemption. Oh, and I love evil guitars". This was the first time the band took a "traditional" approach to writing and recording an album; the songs were written, the band rehearsed together, and they recorded the songs "as a band" in the studio. Five albums in one year [ edit ] We had this random batch of songs. It was not a cohesive record at all. We worked on Nonagon Infinity pretty intensely in and We took a break, and then all these random, disparate song ideas came out of that void of not recording for a little while. Then we worked on everything one album at a time. It is narrated by Leah Senior [45] for the first two chapters, and a text-to-speech program for the final chapter. Mackenzie described the record as "perhaps representing greater changes that are happening in the wider world, and this is our attempt to find beauty within a place that we spend so much time", referring to the constant changes in their neighbourhood. The band encouraged fans and independent record labels to create their own pressings of the album, stating that "[Polygondwanaland] is FREE. Free as in, free. Free to download and if you wish, free to make copies. Ever wanted to start your own record label? Employ your mates, press wax, pack boxes. We do not own this record. Go forth, share, enjoy. A music video created by Jason Galea accompanied its release on YouTube.
