Within a decade he progressed to printing and publishing guidebooks and street directories. The ladybird logo has since undergone several redesigns, the latest of which was launched in . In the s, Ladybird produced the Learnabout series of non-fiction informational books, some of which were used by adults as well as children. An independent company for much of its life, Ladybird Books became part of the Pearson Group in . They were published on 18 November . Early books used a standard page format, chosen because a complete book could be printed on one large standard sheet of paper, a quad crown, 40 inches by 30 inches, [13] which was then folded and cut to size without any waste. It was an economical way of producing books, enabling the books to be retailed at a low price which, for almost thirty years, remained at two shillings and sixpence . Perring, accompanied by full-colour illustrations by A. The appeal of Bunnikin, Downy Duckling and other animal characters made the book an instant success. Later series included nature books series , some illustrated by, for example, Charles Tunnicliffe and Allen W. Most of the remaining titles in the classic format were withdrawn from print in , when the factory in Loughborough which specialised in this format closed. Collecting[edit] With the demise of the traditional Ladybird publishing format has come an increased interest in collecting, often by adults who were children when Ladybird was in its heyday in the s and early s. A great many second-hand Ladybird books are available and it can be an inexpensive hobby. They then argued that if pupils were systematically taught these words, they would be able to read the vast majority of any text they came across. His father was a coal miner in Fife. In his teens Gourdie left school to work but returned and gained a scholarship to the Edinburgh College of Art , where he studied between and Visiting Nuremberg in kilts , he and a friend were informed by some uniformed soldiers that their leader would like to meet the men in tartans , and they met Adolf Hitler. Gourdie returned to the art college, where he received instruction in calligraphy from Irene Wellington. He developed a deep interest in the history of writing and its various forms, alphabets and styles. Teaching career[edit] After he was demobilised Gourdie took his teaching diploma and taught art at Banff Academy in He then returned to Fife as an art teacher at Kirkcaldy High School, where he remained till , after which he retired early from his school teaching career in order to give more attention to calligraphy and to the national and international promotion of the teaching of handwriting. He remained active in his field until his death in Kirkcaldy at the age of 91, coaching his nurses and carers in how to hold a pen. He visited schools, instructing children and teachers "to write in a simple, practical, calligraphic style". At the time he died children in Fife were being taught a script that he had based on a design, but he expressed disappointment that it had not been adopted throughout Scotland. His subject matter was mainly the Fife environs, in particular the coalfields, many of them since shut down. His intricate representation of the atmosphere of the region at that attracted the attention of the National Coal Board , and they bought all that were available. Advocacy and writing[edit] Building on his growing reputation as a calligrapher, Gourdie argued that technological advances did not eliminate the need for handwriting. He wrote prolifically and introduced the italic script widely to European schools. Kay Dick of Glasgow collaborated with him on many projects. Other books followed and established him as a leading authority. The Society of Handwriters made him a life member - the scroll being presented by their president, Humphrey Lyttelton. For his services to calligraphy he was made an MBE in He was aged 46 at the time, which was unusually young for the honour. He loved music, collected recordings and played the trombone and the French horn. Gourdie survived his wife, Lillas, and was survived in turn by their son and daughter.
