Interesting to note, that in india, the theme is more linked with the third son. A sort of ugly duckling, that grows to be a swan itself. This Legend although mentioned in specific detail through many books of the old and new testaments of the King James version of the Bible, predates it, back to the dawn of time in all major philosophies and cultures of the world. Unknowingly blessed as his life unfolds, slowly unveiling the power he holds. And that in England in the seventeenth century there were reports of a Seventh Son healing the deaf, blind and lame. Good Luck was also said to attend the Seventh Child. The number Seven has many mystical and religious associations. Apart from the Bible telling of God creating the world in Seven Days, The number features throughout the old and new testaments. Healing and religion are, or course, deeply linked. Jesus Christ healed the sick and the lame and many saints were healers. Jesus said that others could heal in his name and through his power. And the hope and faith of healing through prayer is a growing force in Christian religions. All the prophets of the Bible speak of him. I am the Branch, Isaiah 4: Behold I come like a thief in the night, And I stand at the door and knock, and whosoever answers I shall enter and sup with thee, bind up and heal thy wounds and give thee knowledge from the tree of life. I have been rejected in the person of my prophets over and over. I have seven eyes and seven horns. The invitation is in Psalm Read it and confess that you do not know me I am the word of God. The key of David is in my hand. I only can open up the prophecies of David and Solomon. I have ascended from the south with the seal of the living God. My name is a counterfeit, a counterfeit is a hypocrite, for as the Son of God and a child of the universe and an earthly being, I am just like you And by my Angels I will strip them naked before all eyes because of their foolish pride Your ministers will lament your foolishness, your lost flock will tear you too pieces. I am the word and you do not know me. I ride on a white horse and my name is secret. Psalm 45 is my invitation to you for extended mercy, I will visit you at your unholy feast He is omnific, omniform, omnipercipent, omniscience, omnipotent. He it was who invented letters, printing, the railroad, the steamboat, the telegraph, the platitude and the circle of the sciences. He created patroitism and taught the nations WAR. Founded theology, philosophy, law, medicine and Chicago. He established monarchical and republican government. In the morning of time he sang upon primitive hills, and in the noonday of existence headed the procession of being. And after the rest of mankind shall have retired for the night of eternal oblivion he will sit up to write a history of human civilization in the books of life. The Holy Grail centers around the mystical number "7" the "fleur de lys" the symbol of the "trinity" that is central in all cultures and religions worldwide All Religions are as one and derived of the poetic genius. No one speaks or knows the Creator Words to the Wise I predict the future from the past.

Who are the sons of God and the Nephilim? Who are the "sons of God" and the Nephilim in Genesis 6: If the Nephilim were a race of giants, how could they appear both before and after the Flood, which destroyed everyone except Noah and his family? Then the LORD said, "My Spirit will not contend with man forever, for he is mortal; his days will be a hundred and twenty years. They were the heroes of old, men of renown. Only Noah was left, and those with him in the ark. We seemed like grasshoppers in our own eyes, and we looked the same to them. There are three proposed interpretations: The Nephilim are giants of extra-human strength who were the offspring of these marriages. The Nephilim were simply "heroes", not giants, and may or may not have been the offspring of the mixed marriages. Arguments for view 1: The phrase "sons of God" is used in Job 1: In support of the idea that angels came to live on earth and married human women, Jude 6 refers to "angels who Arguments against view 1: God seems to condemn mankind for the intermarrying in Gen 6: Arguments for view 2: Humans are referred to as children of God elsewhere in the Bible Deut Arguments against view 2: However, "sons of God" may refer to generations previous to those whose sin brought about the flood. This interpretation requires that the phrases "men" and "daughters of men" have two different meanings within the same sentence. Arguments for view 3: Contemporary rulers referred to themselves as sons of God - the Egyptian king was called "son of Re. While pagans referred to royalty as sons of God, Israelites did not, and nobles were not referred to as "sons of God. Also it seems clear that "sons of God" does not have to refer to angels, fallen or not. Regardless of which interpretation one accepts, there is no contradiction in the Nephilim appearing both before and after the Flood. If the Nephilim were heroes or nobles, society after the Flood could produce heroes and nobles just as well as society before the Flood.

Romulus and Remus with their wolf foster mother, bronze sculpture, c. Nevertheless, Rhea bore the twins Romulus and Remus, fathered by the war god Mars. Amulius ordered the infants drowned in the Tiber River , but the trough in which they were placed floated down the river and came to rest at the site of the future Rome, near the Ficus ruminalis, a sacred fig tree of historical times. There a she-wolf and a woodpeckerâ€”both sacred to Marsâ€”suckled and fed them until they were found by the herdsman Faustulus. The British Library Public Domain Reared by Faustulus and his wife, Acca Larentia, the twins became leaders of a band of adventurous youths, eventually killing Amulius and restoring their grandfather to the throne. They subsequently founded a town on the site where they had been saved. When Romulus built a city wall, Remus jumped over it and was killed by his brother. He increased its population by offering asylum to fugitives and exiles. He invited the neighbouring Sabines to a festival and abducted their women. The women married their captors and intervened to prevent the Sabines from seizing the city. In accordance with a treaty drawn up between the two peoples, Romulus accepted the Sabine king Titus Tatius as his coruler. Believing that he had been changed into a god, the Romans worshiped him as the deity Quirinus. It contains a mixture of Greek and Roman elements. The Greeks customarily created mythical eponymous heroes to explain the origins of place-names. The story of the rape of the Sabine women was perhaps invented to explain the custom of simulated capture in the Roman marriage ceremony. By including Mars in the legend, the Romans were attempting to connect their origins with that important deity. In the early 21st century archaeologists discovered remains from the 8th century bc of a cave, possible boundary walls, and a palace that demonstrated parallels between history and legend. The famous bronze statue of a she-wolf now in the Capitoline Museums in Rome is believed to date to the early years of the Roman Republic late 6th to early 5th century bc ; the suckling twins were added in the 16th century ad. Some scholars, however, have claimed that the statue is from the medieval period. Learn More in these related Britannica articles:

Why would the demons do such a thing? The Bible does not specifically give us the answer. Demons are evil, twisted beings—so nothing they do should surprise us. As to a distinct motivation, one speculation is that the demons were attempting to pollute the human bloodline in order to prevent the coming of the Messiah. God had promised that the Messiah would one day crush the head of the serpent, Satan Genesis 3: Again, this is not a specifically biblical answer, but it is biblically plausible. What were the Nephilim? According to Hebraic and other legends the Book of Enoch and other non-biblical writings , they were a race of giants and super-heroes who did acts of great evil. According to the movie Noah, starring Russell Crowe reviewed by us here , the Nephilim were fallen angels encased in rock. What happened to the Nephilim? The LORD was grieved that he had made man on the earth, and his heart was filled with pain. God proceeded to flood the entire earth, killing everyone and everything other than Noah, his family, and the animals on the ark. All else perished, including the Nephilim Genesis 6: Were there Nephilim after the flood? However, it likely took place to a much lesser extent than it did prior to the flood. When the Israelites spied out the land of Canaan, they reported back to Moses: This passage does not say the Nephilim were genuinely there, only that the spies thought they saw the Nephilim. It is more likely that the spies witnessed very large people in Canaan and in their fear believed them to be the Nephilim. Or it is possible that after the flood the demons again mated with human females, producing more Nephilim. What prevents the demons from producing more Nephilim today? It seems that God put an end to demons mating with humans by placing all the demons who committed such an act in isolation.

The Teutoburg Forest in northwestern Germany The earliest records of the Germanic peoples were recorded by the Romans, and in these works Thor is frequently referred to via a process known as interpretatio romana where characteristics perceived to be similar by Romans result in identification of a non-Roman god as a Roman deity as either the Roman god Jupiter also known as Jove or the Greco-Roman god Hercules. They regard it as a religious duty to offer to him, on fixed days, human as well as other sacrificial victims. Hercules and Mars they appease by animal offerings of the permitted kind" and adds that a portion of the Suebi also venerate " Isis ". For other uses, see Donar disambiguation. Adam details that "Thor, they reckon, rules the sky; he governs thunder and lightning, winds and storms, fine weather and fertility" and that "Thor, with his mace, looks like Jupiter". Adam details that the people of Uppsala had appointed priests to each of the gods, and that the priests were to offer up sacrifices. The first, the Canterbury Charm from Canterbury , England , calls upon Thor to heal a wound by banishing a thurs. On the stick, both Thor and Odin are called upon for help; Thor is asked to "receive" the reader, and Odin to "own" them. All men will their homes forsake. In anger smites the warder of earth, Forth from their homes must all men flee; Nine paces fares the son of Fjorgyn, And, slain by the serpent, fearless he sinks. The ferryman, shouting from the inlet, is immediately rude and obnoxious to Thor and refuses to ferry him. In the end, Thor ends up walking instead. They "sh[ake] the twigs" and interpret what they say. The gods search but find no such cauldron anywhere. Thor eats a big meal of two oxen all the rest eat but one , and then goes to sleep. In the morning, he awakes and informs Hymir that he wants to go fishing the following evening, and that he will catch plenty of food, but that he needs bait. Hymir tells him to go get some bait from his pasture, which he expects should not be a problem for Thor. Hymir catches a few whales at once, and Thor baits his line with the head of the ox. Thor pulls the serpent on board, and violently slams him in the head with his hammer. On shore, Hymir suggests that Thor should help him carry a whale back to his farm. Thor does not attend the event, however, as he is away in the east for unspecified purposes. Beyla adds that Thor will bring peace to the quarrel, to which Loki responds with insults. Thor again tells him to be silent, and threatens to throw him into the sky, where he will never be seen again. Thor responds with a fourth call to be silent, and threatens to send Loki to Hel. Thor turns to Loki, and tells him that nobody knows that the hammer has been stolen. Freyja agrees, and says she would lend it to Thor even if it were made of silver or gold, and Loki flies off, the feather cloak whistling. Thor eats and drinks ferociously, consuming entire animals and three casks of mead. Terrifying eyes stare back at him, seemingly burning with fire. Loki says that this is because "Freyja" has not slept for eight nights in her eagerness. As the poem starts, Thor meets a dwarf who talks about getting married. Thor finds the dwarf repulsive and, apparently, realizes that the bride is his daughter. Thor comments that the wedding agreement was made among the gods while Thor was gone, and that the dwarf must seek his consent. Thor, also known as Tror, is said to have married the prophetess Sibyl identified with Sif. Thor is further said here to have been raised in Thrace by a chieftain named Lorikus , whom he later slew to assume the title of "King of Thrace", to have had hair "fairer than gold", and to have been strong enough to lift ten bearskins. Alternatively, Troy is in Tyrkland Turkey, i. Odin is a remote descendant of Thor, removed by twelve generations, who led an expedition across Germany, Denmark and Sweden to Norway. The saga narrative adds that numerous names at the time of the narrative, popularly in use were derived from Thor. In connection, the lack of trolls and ettins in modern Scandinavia is explained as a result of the "accuracy and efficiency of the lightning strokes". Hammer pendants and Eyrarland Statue[edit] Main article: The hammers may have been worn as a symbol of Norse pagan faith and of opposition to Christianization, a response to crosses worn by Christians. Swastika Germanic Iron Age Detail of swastika on the 9th century Snoldelev Stone The swastika symbol has been identified as representing the hammer or lightning of Thor. It seems to have been used by the warrior also, in the form of the swastika. Primarily it appears to have had connections with light and fire, and to have

Seeger They say the sun that exists today was born in 13 Reed [], and it was then that light came, and it dawned. Movement Sun, which exists today, has the day sign 4 Movement, and this sun is the fifth sun that there is. In its time there will be earthquakes, famine. In the Aztec tradition, the universe was not permanent or everlasting. Like all living things it would someday have to come to an end. They pictured time as a cycle of births, destruction, and rebirths. Much of the mythology and ritual revolving around this legend took root in Aztec society and thought. The Legend of the Five Suns The Aztec Legend of the Five Suns survives in pictographs carved and painted on stone, scattered oral traditions kept by the distant descendants of the Aztecs, and texts of ancient Mexico. The author of the literary versions of the story may have even relied on the stone inscriptions to inscribe the myth. The primary source for Aztec mythology is the Codex Chimalpopoca. Here the author speaks to us as though we were looking over his shoulder, while he points to the painted figures. The cosmos goes through a series of deaths and rebirths. There are different variations of the creation myth, the importance of which will be discussed later. In each age the world is destroyed through a different agent. Life cannot be renewed until a new god or goddess sacrifices him or herself to become the new sun and light for the world. The first sun was known as Four Water. In this age, the gods created humans from ashes and gave them acorns for food. This age was ruled by Chalchiuhtlicue, the water goddess and came to an end when the world was engulfed by floods. Some people were saved by being transformed into fish. The second sun was known as Four Jaguar. The people of this age were said to be monstrous: With no light, the remaining people were eaten by jaguars. The third age was known as Four Rain and was ruled by Tlaloc. This age came to an end when fire and gravel rained down from the sky and set the land ablaze. Some people were saved by being changed into birds. The fourth sun was known as Four Wind and was ruled by Quetzalcoatl. This age came to an end when a great hurricane raged across the land and blew the people off the face of the world. Some people survived by being changed into monkeys and scattering themselves in the forests and mountains. The fifth and final sun is known as Four Movement and is ruled by Nanahuatzin. This era came into being when the god of the age threw himself into a fire to become the sun. However "at first he was motionless, and so the other gods sacrificed their blood to provide him with the energy for his celestial movement. On his way back, he was forced into a battle with the Death Lord, and the bones broke. Upon returning the realm of gods, he had the earth goddess Cihuacoatl grind the bones into meal. Finally, he sprinkled the remains with blood from his penis to create a new race of humans. The fifth sun will come to an end when the sun no longer receives enough blood to continue his course, and the world will be destroyed by earthquakes. However, there are some problems concerning the Five Suns. Also, not all sources agree on which sun came first. Occasional variations pop up here and there. The previously given order is from the Codex Chimalpopoca, and seems to have been the commonly accepted order. Mythic Interpretation The Five Suns and its implications were so deeply ingrained in Aztec society and ritual it is difficult to separate them. To understand the Five Suns, one must understand several aspects of Aztec society, including views of time, space, war, rulership, and even recreation. Some people may wonder why the Aztecs chose to limit the cosmos to five eras. Quite simply, five was a sacred number based on the five directions. These directions were the four cardinal points plus the center. The center was understood to be the star cluster known as the Pleiades. Like many ancient cultures, the Aztecs were sky watchers and developed a calendar based on the observations they made. The world survived in fifty- two year cycles, and the "world was known to be safe from destruction at any point within the calendar round; it was only at the expiration on one set, before the succeeding one began, that the world was vulnerable. This ritual involved watching the movement of the stars until midnight. At this time, if the Pleiades had reached the zenith, or highest point in the sky, the world was safe and would continue for another fifty two years. Otherwise, demons would come down from the heavens and devour the people. When the Pleiades crossed the meridian and the life of the world was secure, the priests would perform a human sacrifice. Preferably, the victim would need to be a captured general or other important prisoner of war. The victim had his chest cut open and heart removed. The organ was then burned and a new fire was kindled in the chest cavity. Swift runners would then light torches from this fire and take the new fire across the land, using it to start fires for the people of the community. The body of the victim would be burned along with a bundle of fifty-two sticks. A great deal of Aztec mythology revolves around the role and worship of the sun. Such worship is not surprising given the climate the Aztecs lived in. These cultures tended to view the sun more mercifully. However, in warmer climates the sun took on a different role. Life became more dangerous during the warmest parts of the year, and precautions would need to be taken in order to avoid more mundane dangers like heat exhaustion and stroke. But humans were not the only life forms to suffer during period of intense heat. There was also damage done to vegetation. A dry season could spell disaster for a community if the sun became too angry and refused to let the life giving rains fall to earth. A particularly long and hard summer may have been viewed as divine retribution for human sin. For this reason, it was important for the Aztecs to keep the sun satisfied, or else he might bring on the final judgment. The best way to satisfy this fickle deity was with the most precious substance in the universe: Humanity would need to give back to the gods because "the gods freely accepted death, sacrificing themselves so that the.
