In order to continue to exist, desire must have its objects perpetually absent. This is what Pascal means when he says that we are only truly happy when daydreaming about future happiness. Or why Wow, Just watched this movie and got my goosebumps!! Or why we say the hunt is sweeter than the kill. Or be careful what you wish for. So the lesson of Lacan is, living by your wants will never make you happy. Because in the end, the only way that we can measure the significance of our own lives is by valuing the lives of others. We spend our whole life trying to stop death. Eating, inventing, loving, praying, fighting, killing. But what do we really know about death? Just that nobody comes back. Then there comes a point - a moment - in life when your mind outlives its desires, its obsessions, when your habits survive your dreams, and when your losses Maybe death is a gift. I just cannot say why. You have 24 hours to find out. You know you are in the bible belt when there are more churches than Starbucks. When there are more prisons than Starbucks. You harden their hearts with hate, you take away their capacity for civilized dispassion, you condemn them to bloodlust. We leave the death house muttering that lethal injection was just too good for them. In the end, a civilized society must live with a hard truth:

2: The Life of David Gale by Dewey Gram

The mystery of one man's guilt or innocence literally becomes a matter of life and death in this drama. David Gale (Kevin Spacey) was the head of the philosophy department at Austin University and.

Considered very intelligent, but is too eager to fight for his cause. His ego takes over example: He has a wife and a little boy with whom he lives in a decent home. Runs the DeathWatch with his good friend and colleague Constance Harraway. DeathWatch is a movement against capital punishment. All in all a very respected, intelligent and good man. After he gets excluded from the University, due to an accusation of rape, he becomes an alcoholic and his entire life spins out of control. Has recently been to jail for refusing to reveal her sources in court. Bitsey Bloom is willing to go a long way to help the condemned and is very selfconfident. Issues concerning death penalty Edit In the movie a few issues regarding the fairness of the death penalty are raised. Through the work of Constance and Gale in the Deathwatch we more than once hear that race plays a big role in deciding whether to execute the sentenced or not. It is clear from the cases they work with, that more blacks get sentenced to death row. It is also stated in movie that it is more of a crime to kill a white man than it is killing a black man. In one particular scene from the movie Constance is working on saving a young girl from the death row. She has been sentenced to death after killing a cop. Although Constance is doing her best to save the girl she must soon realize that there is no way out for a sentenced who has killed an authority. This is an obvious criticism of the society and the unevenness within society. The last big issue that is presented regarding the death penalty is concerning the lawyers. If the convicted has not got a lot of money, they simply cannot afford a qualified lawyer. Is the movie realistic? Throughout recent history there have been quite a few cases both where executed people later have been proven innocent, but also where people have been proven innocent before a pending execution. Furthermore, 39 executions are believed to have been carried out in spite of serious doubt about guilt. Some of the most famous cases in the U. China is one of the countries on earth who executes most people. One of these examples include the chinese citizen Wei Qingang who was executed for the rape of Liu. In the following month of the execution, a man named Tian Yuxiu committed to the rape. Approximatley three years later Qingang was declared innocent. So is the movie realistic? Yes, the movie is quite realistic as there are numerous examples of wrongfull convictions and executions of innocent people. How do we start? No one who looks through that glass sees a person. They see a crime. David Gale says that he is not himself anymore - he has become a crime, a murderer and a rapist, and therefore he has become some kind of symbol of evil. People are filled with an rancour detestation towards convicted felons, which completely overshadows the sanctity of fair trials and convictions based on evidence and rationality rather than emotions. This could more or less be what David Gale indirectly indicates in this conversation. The most important message is that an innocent man accidentally can be punished and die because of the system of justices carelessness. Another theme is self-sacrificing. David Gale sacrifices his own life to prove that death penalty is wrong. In the end of the movie it takes an unforeseen turn. The ending is about miscarriage of justice, again a political theme.

The Life of David Gale is a American drama film directed by Alan Parker (in his final film as a director) and written by Charles Randolph. The film is an international co-production, between the United States, Germany and the United Kingdom.

Plot[ edit ] David Gale is a professor on death row in Texas. With only a few days until his execution, his lawyer negotiates a half-million dollar fee to tell his story to Bitsey Bloom, a journalist from a major news magazine. She has a reputation of keeping secrets and protecting her sources. He tells her how he ended up on death row, revealed through a series of lengthy flashbacks. Gale is head of the philosophy department at the University of Austin and an active member of DeathWatch, an advocacy group campaigning against capital punishment. At a graduation party, he encounters Berlin, an attractive graduate student who had been expelled from the school. When Gale gets drunk at the party, she seduces him and they have sex. She then falsely accuses Gale of rape. After losing the debate, Gale is arrested and charged with rape. While the rape charge against Gale is later dropped, the damage had already been done, and his family, marriage, university career and reputation are all destroyed. Constance Harraway, a fellow DeathWatch activist, is a close friend of Gale who consoles him after his life falls apart, and the pair have sex. However, the next day, Harraway is discovered raped and murdered, suffocated by a plastic bag taped over her head. The physical evidence at the crime scene points to Gale, who is convicted of rape and murder and is sentenced to death. In the present, Bloom investigates the case in between her visits with Gale. She comes to believe that the apparent evidence against Gale does not add up. She is tailed several times in her car by Dusty Wright, an alleged one-time lover and colleague of Harraway, who she suspects was the real killer. Wright slips evidence to Bloom that suggests Gale has been framed, implying that the actual murderer videotaped the crime. Bloom pursues this lead until she finds a tape revealing that Harraway, who was suffering from terminal leukemia , had committed an elaborate suicide made to look like murder. Wright is seen on the videotape, acting as her accomplice, implying that they framed Gale as part of a plan to discredit the death penalty by conspiring to execute an innocent person, and subsequently releasing evidence of the actual circumstances. She tries to give the tape to the authorities in time to stop the execution. She arrives at the Huntsville Unit just as the warden announces that the execution has been carried out. The tape is subsequently released, causing a media and political uproar over the execution of an innocent man. His ex-wife looks distraught, knowing Gale told the truth and that she effectively stole their child away from him. Much later still, a videotape labeled "Off the Record" is delivered to Bloom. This tape picks up at the point where Wright confirmed that Harraway was dead. It continues, showing him stepping aside to allow Gale, also present and party to the suicide, to caress the body of his lover, deliberately leaving his fingerprints on the plastic bag in the process. He then stands up and ends the recording, leaving Bloom stunned with the truth that the couple deliberately sacrificed themselves to discredit capital punishment.
