

1: Golden Easter Egg - Wikipedia

The vanishing breed / Gretel Ehrlich --The lure of impossible places / Tim Cahill --Out of thin air / David Roberts --Thirteen ways of looking at a void / Michael Frankel --Being the boatman / Charlie Graber --The last Cairn / Chip Brown --The man who walked through time / Michael Shnayerson.

Tom Rogic sparks revival against Denmark to win chance to silence critics Read more The bleating and complaining about the non-use of Cahill in Australia has been immense. His place in Australian sporting history is already assured. The forward is 38 years old, turning 39 in less than seven months. His best days are clearly behind him. He is five years older than skipper Mile Jedinak and six years older than Mark Milligan, the other two veterans of the squad. Unlike Jedinak and Milligan, Cahill has barely played club football in the past year. He has played 16 first-team games since October, for Melbourne City in the A-League and Millwall in the English Championship, and not started any of them. As a substitute his sum total of goals is zero. His total time on the pitch in the past season? A mere minutes. Why would Van Marwijk be any different? The quicker and more mobile Andrew Nabbout, who can press and harry defenders does, hence his starts against France and Denmark. To accuse Van Marwijk, a man who has coached at the elite level of European football for more than two decades, and who led the Netherlands to the World Cup final, of footballing ignorance is absurd. Cahill certainly does have some value as a leader, as a big-brother influence and as someone who can help advise and assist younger teammates. And on evidence in Russia he has done just that without complaint. And the youngest player amongst all 32 nations in Russia is Daniel Arzani. Considering Arzani has played just 24 first-team games in his whole life, all in the A-League and only four times lasted the full 90 minutes, that may be a bridge too far. Still, his rise is nothing short of remarkable. Against Denmark he almost scored, set up two excellent chances for teammates and skinned Pione Sisto in just a minute cameo. Already European clubs are lining up to lure Arzani overseas. Arzani is under contract with Melbourne City, who are owned by Manchester City for another season. As a result, Manchester may do a similar deal with Arzani as they did with Aaron Mooy by loaning him out and then cashing in on the prodigious youngster. Fast, skilful, confident but humble, some believe Arzani has potential to be better than former Australian golden boy Harry Kewell. The year-old took the playmaker under his wing in the past two seasons while at Melbourne City and has undertaken the same role in Russia. He also admits he has never had the natural abilities the year-old possesses. Talking about his mentoring role with the current Socceroos squad last week, Cahill said: So how now do I fuse hard work and discipline into his life? I give him no choice. Cahill may or may not see game-time against Peru. The baton has been passed and everyone else needs to accept it.

2: Why Cahill's Indian switch is a smart move | The World Game

The new age of adventure: ten years of great writing. The vanishing breed / Gretel Ehrlich --The lure of impossible places / Tim Cahill --Out of thin air / David.

France v Australia So it does not surprise me at all that he is here with Australia at the age of Tim is one of my closest friends in football and I know that, when he sets his mind on something, he is totally driven in terms of achieving it. That determination is probably his defining characteristic as a player and a person, and it was the thing that drew me to him from the first day I met him. When I joined Everton in , he was the first person I really bonded with. He was a great ally for me inside the dressing room, and a great guy to be around outside of it - we still speak regularly now. If he plays for Australia in Russia, Cahill will have featured in four World Cups - every tournament since , when he scored the first World Cup goal in their history. Tim wants his name to be up there with them. Can he do it? Well, with Tim, every time you think that he is done, he comes up with something special - like he did when he proved people wrong by scoring the goals in the play-off against Syria that got Australia to Russia. This World Cup is probably his last big tournament to produce something like that again as a player and I just hope he gets an opportunity. Giggs, Beckham, Ronaldo, Cantona and Cahill? Media playback is not supported on this device World Cup Tim Cahill nets stunning volley for Australia What makes Tim so special? Well, forget tricks and flicks and all that kind of business; it is his attitude that is absolutely world-class. It is as good as the very best players I have been team-mates with. It was the first thing that struck me when I went to Everton. There were plenty of players there with more skill, but nobody else had the same heart as this Aussie kid. Tim wanted to be as good as he could be, and he has gone on to have an unbelievable career that has taken him all over the world. He is a great example to young players out there that nothing is impossible if you really set your mind to it. I love the typical Australian approach to sport anyway, because they always seem ready to take on the world. Tim has got that in abundance. We are both positive people and not one ounce of negativity came out of him in all the years I played with him, from to I can imagine he will be exactly the same now in the Australia camp - he is an inspiration, which is part of the reason he has been picked. Some players lead with their voice and what they say. With others it is with what they do. Occasions like that are when he really came into his own and he sucked people along with him to bring out the best in them too, which is the sign of a really good player. He will be relishing the chance to play against the likes of Paul Pogba and Antoine Griezmann because he loves to pit himself against the very best, and he will put in a performance too - I have no doubts about that. Talisman, hero and future manager? For the younger players in their squad he is their hero, a pioneer they can look up to and learn from. But right now he is still a player and I know what he will be thinking - yes, I can inspire this team off the field but, when I get my chance on it, I am going to score that goal that puts me up there with probably the greatest player of all time, Pele. At his age, you have to use all of your qualities plus your intelligence and your experience to get an opportunity in front of goal, and then take it. If it happens, Tim will be ready.

3: The Adventure Blog: Book Review: The New Age of Adventure

Washington, D.C.: National Geographic Society, [J]. Status: Available Online.

Though the big brands like Nike, Adidas and Visa have all launched their World Cup ads, there have been just a few viral campaigns on social media so far. Altogether, just 20 of the 34 commercial spots for the World Cup have been sold. This will undoubtedly cost FIFA hundreds of million of dollars in lost revenue, which is bad news for President Gianni Infantino, who promised member states that revenues would increase during his term. The reason is simple: Brand Russia Russia is not an unknown quantity. What some companies may be concerned about is how these associations could impact their brands at a local level. But with Russia, a certain avoidance strategy might be taking place. In fact, Brazil continues to feature prominently in advertising for this reason. However, even when a brand like Lufthansa did try to feature Russia in its World Cup advertisement, it ran into trouble due to difficulties obtaining permission to film there. This could also be why Visa decided to re-record some of its World Cup advertisements that contained voiceovers by Morgan Freeman, who was recently accused by several women of inappropriate behaviour. All this said, Russia itself is now one of the most attractive markets for many companies, largely thanks to a growing middle class with a love for Western brands. But where some see challenges with FIFA, others see opportunity. Drinkable yoghurt, anyone? And, of course, the brand transference from some of the highest-profile athletes on earth is hard to ignore in markets like China, tarnished brand or not. Social and e-game influences Finally, we may also be seeing a shift in the sport marketing world itself. Though recent sports media deals in the US, Australia and elsewhere point to a healthy market for sports products, the peak earning for event sponsorships like the World Cup has likely been reached. With the growing adoption of e-games and e-sports by younger sports fans, the desire to experience big events like the World Cup or Olympics in person is diminishing. And with micro-influencers also becoming more popular as endorsers in marketing, there is less need for brands to seek out highly paid football stars who may make just one appearance a year in a market like Australia. If anything, the World Cup really is a victim of its own success. Faster, higher, stronger and more expensive: So, will major Western brands stay with the World Cup in the long term? If the World Cup is awarded to North America, this could bring many Western brands rushing back to the tournament, willing to pay a premium for any deal. And while a future World Cup in Australia is unlikely, perhaps one in China would be enough to tempt local brands to cough up the money for a regional partnership.

4: Adventure envy - GetGoing NC!

Tim Cahill may have played in Liverpool, New York, China and Melbourne since first leaving Millwall, but he could not resist the lure of his old club's famous team spirit and hard graft to.

JoeMiller 13 Comments I was â€œenvious? Envious of the degree nights? Envious of having to crawl out of a warm bag at 4 a. Alan had just gotten back from six days on the Appalachian Trail in Virginia. Six days that saw the first cold of the season descend, bringing with it those degree nights and daytime highs in the 20s. Six days with snow, a foot on the trail in places, drifts of up to two-and-a-half feet. Six rare days of bona fide winter backpacking, Southern style. His trip had the added cache of accompanying a thru-hiker down the homestretch. Meanwhile, I spent the week here in Cary, sick, going three-on-one with the kids. An adventure in its own right. I was desperate for adventure. Alan was desperate to get off the phone. I just finished a book on backpacking in North Carolina. And that may be true for the Edmund Hillarys and Ernest Shackletons of the world. But for the vast majority of the rest of us, adventure abounds. To those of us who will never conquer a geologic feature and have it named for us, that should be enough. Cahill has had his share of adventure over five decades of going, observing, experiencing, reporting. But then it occurred to me that this was, in fact, the oldest site I could see from my front door, the oldest site on the mountain overlooking my town, and the oldest site that I personally knew a great deal about. It is my personal ultimate first-American site. Maybe not in the grand scheme of things, but certainly in my sphere of adventure. Mount Mitchell in winter photo courtesy N.

5: The new age of adventure : ten years of great writing / |

Personally, I found Tim Cahill's "The Lure of Impossible Places" to be quite excellent, as it really captured the spirit of adventure and exploration. David Robert's "Out of Thin Air" was also quite interesting as well, chronicling the expedition to Everest that discovered the remains of Mallory.

It just failed to In contrast, I suspect TC has a beard. I suspect everyone he hangs out with has unironic beards also. He probably goes to gritty bars in small towns in Mexcio where the bartender knows him by name. He drinks from shot glasses whatever Ernest Hemingway would have drunk. He was in Wherever, Third World just after the revolution. He was on the last steamboat out of Wherever just before the revolution started. In short, so much unironic manliness was a bit like taking a shot of testosterone straight to the head. Made me wonder if I should stop reading to scratch. The irony is that sometimes TC thinks he is Bill Bryson. He knows guys much tougher than he is and so in comparison he feels like the one falling off logs. Oh but see how tough and manly I am because I do it all anyway. The piece on the llamas alone is worth giving it shelf space. Tempting the glacier to ice-bomb his kayak in Glacier Bay, Alaska. Finding his snowshoes ineffective going up the White Mountains, New Hampshire. Learning the lowriding culture of tricked out cars in LA. Killing oil well fires in Kuwait where Iraqis had defecated in every room in the country. Sharing a campfire with fishermen in the Sea of Cortez, Baja California. Of these and many others, Cahill gives a true sense of the actual experience, straight from the gut, not taken too seriously. Great, great fun to read.

6: Why some Western companies are distancing themselves from the World Cup brand

I've loved every piece I've read, from Tim Cahill's "The Lure of Impossible Places" to Michael Shnayerson's "The Man Who Walked Through Time," about Sir Wilfred Thesiger. Terry Ward Finally braving the concept of the wechseldusche here at home (rough translation from German is 'contrast shower'), and on my own free will.

7: Cahill feeling great for Socceros D-Day

National Geographic Adventure has published the best work by today's finest writers, and this tenth anniversary anthology assembles an elite corps of authors that includes Sebastian Junger, Peter Matthiessen, Philip Caputo, and two dozen others.

8: WATCH: Ryan backs Cahill to "do the impossible"™ again | Sporting News

Tim Brookes was a year-old Oxford student when he first succumbed to the lure of America's open road. Equipped with a change of clothes, a cheap guitar, and the youthful wanderlust of the Easy Rider era, he spent the summer of '73 hitchhiking from the East Coast to the West Coast and back again, an exhilarating experience that ultimately led him to leave old England to settle in New England.

9: Cahill Believes he has 3 more years "I Love Theo Walcott

™! Best goals of the week in real life football recreated! Tim Cahill, Bentaleb, Holebas & Muniain best goals in real life football recreated! Best football goals recreated! Can you guess.

Fighting Dynamics Reel 105. September 15-30, 1851 Nirvana : University of Washington, Seattle, January 6, 1990 Tim Hughes Canadian Parks Service classification system for historical collections. Archaeology of Performance A priest for all liturgical seasons Collecting American Paintings Origins of Christendom in the West An inquiry into the causes of the insurrection of the negroes in the island of St. Domingo. 8 Upper West Region Fluffy saves Christmas Transactional model of stress and coping theory Environment of life Critical observations Helium cryogenics Financial Market Analysis When it seems like god doesnt care That will help us ceer up. Smudge pits and hide smoking revisited James M. Skibo, John G. Franzen, and Eric C. Drake Marilyn manson long hard road out of hell Illustrative handbook of general surgery Strategic human resource management book Panic at Emu Flat (Adventures Down Under #8) Milk Producers Prompt Payment Act of 1984 A Guide for Using Charlie the Chocolate Factory in the Classroom Gender and power in affluent Asia 5th grade geometry worksheets Meaning of customer relationship management Pirate of the Far East Critical response to Kurt Vonnegut Analytic and Holistic Processes in the Perception of Faces, Objects, and Scenes (Advances in Visual Cogni British Policy and the Transfer of Power in Asia: Documentary Perspectives The Story of the Ten Commandments December the 27th 8.3 Consciousness as treated in Philosophy Scooby-doo and the haunted lab Diagnostic surgical pathology of the head and neck The charms of Thomas Filbett Is it ok to add bookmarks to a uments The cause of Christian education