Leslie Sarah Jeanetta Stiggins: The famous Indian fighter, Samuel Dale, was a guest at their wedding. According to the records I have, there were five children Born to them. Weatherford, Washington Weatherford and Levitia Weatherford were their children. Susannah escaped the massacre as a prisoner of an Indian. She later Married Absolom Sizemore. His family moved to Baldwin County and George was placed under the direction of tutors from Mobile and received a fair education. He Married Elizabeth Adcock on Jan. All of these children were listed as Indians on the Monroe County census. He was not at Fort Mims on the day of the massacre, having left the day before on a trip to Mobile. He was appointed of the Indian agents to work with the government on the Removal Treaty of the Indians in Alabama. During these negotiations, he made several trips to Washington, D. On one of these trips he stopped to visit with his aunts, Mrs. Proctor, and his Uncle Selocta who were quite elderly. Selocta was then the chief of the Indians at Nauche. He greeted his nephew by sitting with his legs crossed, which was customary for the old chief when he was in the presence of his successor. George later said that it made him feel badly as he had no desire to become a chief. In the s George moved to what is now Macon County to receive his allotment of land according to the Creek Treaty of Stiggins developed heart dropsy in and although he had the services of the best doctors of the time, he died in November of at the age of He died of injuries sustained when his horse ran away throwing him out of the buggy. As two of the quintessential players in the Chanuka tradition as told by Orthodox Jews for millennia, for their essential roles in the physical and spiritual victory of the Macabees over the Hellenists and their supporters, were women. This inspirational woman truly follows in the footsteps of Yehudis and Chana. Through her own self-sacrifice, devotion to the Torah, and faith in Hashem, this heroine has served as a role model to all of us who are privileged enough to know her. In contrast to the understanding of modern day heroes and heroines, this woman is not an athlete, she does not have a movie or modeling contract, she does not have any fancy degrees, she has not authored any books and she has never had her name in the newspaper or on television. To the unsuspecting eye, this woman is quite ordinary. She cooks dinner, does laundry and washes dishes. She supports her husband while he learns in Yeshiva and is working on building a traditional Jewish family with him. I can hear the groans through cyberspace already. Another victim of Orthodox misogyny, another poor girl who has incorporated the beliefs of her Rabbinic Handlers, another poor ignoramus willing to suppress her potential to support a lazy, good for nothing Torah scholar. But all you naysayers beware, because your gut reactions to this woman and her lifestyle choice could not be further from the truth. Despite her seemingly simple exterior, this woman is an inspiration to all those who are privileged to know her and her mere presence has enriched all of our lives. Right before their wedding, the groom began to experience sharp pains. He had to be hospitalized. He was subsequently diagnosed with cancer. This young woman could have bolted and no one would have thought any worse of her. She had not known the groom that long. This innocent 20 something had her whole life ahead of her. But she decided that this young man was her true life partner and believed that her faith would carry her through. Shortly after the wedding the groom suffered setback after setback, requiring surgery, chemotherapy and radiation treatments. He spent their honeymoon and subsequent first years of marriage in and out of the hospital, suffering and in terrible pain. This young couple suffered through things together, that no should experience in their life time. In this modern age, we all have freedom of choice, and marriage like everything else is disposable. If the first marriage you buy is broken, just go out and buy another one. But this couple resisted all odds. Their suffering had a paradoxical effect, it brought them closer together. They inspired each other and those around them. They always had a positive outlook and believed that things would work out for the best. They saw the hand of G-d in all their suffering and used their pain to build a stronger life together, a stronger connection to Judaism, a stronger connection to G-d. Not only did their experiences improve their lives, their pain brought out positive attributes and behaviors in the community around them. The love and support heaped upon this couple, by their family, friends and neighbors, strengthened anyone they encountered, Jews and non-Jews alike. On this Chanukah morning, five years later, this heroine and her husband celebrated the Bris Milah of their first son. The day was filled with joy and inspiration. This heroine and her husband continued to inspire those around them. The day was filled with tears of joy, hugs and blessings for the future of this baby and his special parents. This young couple and their families, repeatedly expressed gratitude to G-d for the glorious gift of life bestowed upon their family. In their suffering they did not become bitter, they learned to appreciate every day, and they learned to be grateful for their portion in life. This woman is a true Jewish heroine not because of what she does for a living, because of her education or because of what she wears. She is a heroine because of her inner strength and devotion to G-d, her husband, to her family and her faith. This heroine is close to G-d, not because she wears a Tallis and Tefilin, gets and Aliyah to the Torah, or wears a Kipah and participates in an egalitarian minyan. She is close to G-d, because she believes in G-d and the Torah with all her heart and wants to transmit those beliefs, in their unadulterated form, to the next generation. Her true legacy will not be determined by her external attributes, by her beauty, by her wealth, by her career “ but by her success in building a home that nurtures and respects our holy traditions. To me she is a quintessential Jewish heroine, one who truly follows in the footsteps of the countless Jewish heroines that came before her. She is a true beacon of strength, light and inspiration “ someone we should all try to emulate. She has inspired hundreds and perhaps thousands of people to become closer to G-d through her silent devotion, through her unwavering belief in G-d and the Torah, through her simple acts of love, devotion and strength.

At the age of 15 he was captured by the Senecas and lived with them as a prisoner for three years. He was a loyalist and for some reason the Americans regarded him with greater detestation than for other of their foes, and he seems to have returned their feeling in full measure. I have yet to find who Miajah Calloway was. Some of the prisoners were shortly after released: Ground, one of the children of J. Long, was a small girl when taken, and can give no further particulars. A fellow Conway researcher writes: He is mentioned on pg 9 as follows: In , Joseph Conway was wounded and scalped by an Indian and taken to Detroit as a prisoner. He lived to a ripe old age bearing his scalp wound. His sister, who was captured at the same time, was sold to Indians further west and was not found by her family for many years. Captain Conway received one of the first land grants, in the area in , where Conway Road bears his name. Captain Joseph Conway was the best known officer from this district. Records show that 45 mounted riflemen served under him, defending the area from attack. While a boy, his family moved to Kentucky where he took an active part in Indian fighting. One day in Joseph Conway, then a youth of 17, was in a creek near his home when a sulking Indian shot, wounded and quickly scalped him. The redskin was a scout for a force of British Indians from Detroit. All of the settlers were abducted as prisoners and taken to Detroit. On the way, an elderly woman, Mrs. When the years of captivity were over he learned that one of his sisters had been sold to Indians further west; six years later, she was reunited with her family. Captain Conway received one of the first Spanish land grants in St. Louis County in from Zenon Trudeau. His grant was located in the area called "Bon Homme". Most of the early settlers under Spanish and French rule who received land grants were Protestant colonists from the east. These were men in search of more "elbow-room. Captain Joseph Conway buried here with his numerous family. He owned acres in Township 45 according to an map by Julius Hitawa. Joseph is mentioned in this book also but esp in Chapter IV. Joseph, Jr donated his fathers land to the church. Over the next few weeks I will copy these and send them to the Ruddlesfort-L list.
