Dance The Message's vision is to bring people together by creating a worldwide moment of dance! This 1 minute is for EVERYONE, to dance for equality and to celebrate the fact that we are all unified because of our humanity.

Check new design of our homepage! Dance is known to liberate, and eventually lead you away from the stress and humdrum of life. DancePoise Staff Last Updated: Feb 16, What do you do, when you know words will never be enough to express the emotions you feel? Dance, yes dance and only dance. Dance has a way of speaking through movements, of bringing up emotions, and eventually pouring it out into the open. Whether you agree or not, it is one of the most liberating experiences ever. Dance is an art, a movement, an expression which often tells a story. It is by far, a means of nonverbal communication and is known to release pent up emotions, and is a perfect stress buster. Amazing Dance Quotes that Inspire Only a dancer, who has experienced its power, will understand the importance for dance in life. And people who have lived it forever can explain how passionate it can really make you. If not then no matter, go right on doing what you love. The body - an instrument. Learn to play the instrument and master the art form" - Debbie Dee "There are shortcuts to happiness, and dancing is one of them. Purkey "In conversation as in dance, each is the mirror of other. Larger, more beautiful, more powerful.. This is power, it is glory on earth and it is yours for the taking" - Agnes De Mille "All that is important is this one moment in movement. Make the moment important, vital, and worth living. Do not let it slip away unnoticed and unused. For it is no mere translation or abstraction of life. It is life itself" - Henry Havelock "In life as in dance: Grace glides on blistered feet. Just get up and dance. Great dancers are great because of their passion. If nothing, you will have something to do which will be interesting as well as refreshing.

Waewae takahia kia kino Stamp the feet as hard as you can Also essential to the art of haka are pukana dilating of the eyes , whetero protruding of the tongue performed by men only , ngangahu similar to pukana, performed by both sexes , and potete the closing of the eyes at different points in the dance, performed by the women only. These expressions are used at various times in the performance to lend meaning and force to the words. It is important to realise that haka are generally not uniformly enacted, with all participants acting in time. The best haka involve a good deal of spontaneity and creativity as the performers interpret the words and feel the power of the haka take hold of them. Different Styles of Haka There are several styles of haka. Ka Mate was originally of the ngeri style, a short free-form haka where the performers interpret as they feel fit. It is also performed without weapons, and is not therefore a war-dance as is commonly supposed. The peruperu is a style of haka for a war-dance. It involves weapons and is characterised by a high jump with legs folded underneath at the end. However since the new millennium they have sorted this out. In fact the All Black rendition of Ka Mate has inevitably undergone quite a few changes along the way to make it more impressive or appropriate to the game of rugby or those doing it at the time. Dating from a time some years before he was born, the son of chief Werawera, there had been inter-tribal war between the Ngati-Toa and the neighbouring Waikato tribe. It was a bitter story of constant skirmish, reprisal and territorial dispute. Growing up in this environment, with his father captured, killed and eaten when he was a young boy, Te Rauparaha became one of the most feared and respected warrior chiefs in Maori history. Later on he led his tribe South, and by was master of the whole coast stretching from Wanganui to Wellington, including Kapiti island, but at the time of composition he was in the thick of the action somewhere in the region of Taupo. Fleeing for his life he came to Te Wharerangi and asked for his protection. Although reluctant, Te Wharerangi eventually agreed and bid him hide in a kumara pit. His wife, Te Rangikoea sat over the entrance to it. There are two stories put forward as to why Te Rangikoea sat over the entrance like this. The first has it that no Maori male of consequence would ever put himself in a position where he would be beneath the genital organs of a woman. Thus the hiding place would be discounted by the pursuers. Of course Te Rauparaha was naturally willing to forego this custom in order to survive. The second tells that she sat there in order to have a neutralising effect on the incantations recited by the pursuing Chiefs; the female organs were believed to have a shielding effect. Tenei te tangata puhuruhuru nana nei i tiki mai whakawhiti te ra! For this is the hairy man who has fetched the sun and caused it to shine again! Te Wharerangi is described as a man with more than his fair share of body-hair, hence the reference. The variation used by the All Blacks is given below, together with the translation. Note that the words have been split in some cases to indicate the cadence of the syllables as the haka is performed. The Words of Ka Mate Ka mate! Tenei te tangata puhuru huru This is the hairy man Nana nei i tiki mai Who fetched the Sun And caused it to shine again A upa â€” ne! A upane kaupane whiti te ra! An upward step, another.. Some incidentals A kumara is a sweet potato â€” very nice with a roast! These were often harvested and stored in a pit to keep them dry. All Blacks, let me become one with the land Hi aue ii! Ko Aotearoa e ngunguru nei! This is our land that rumbles Au, au, aue ha! Ko Kapa O Pango e ngunguru nei! This defines us as the All Blacks Au, au, aue ha!

Dance The Message, Amsterdam. likes. DTM's mission is to unite people all around the world. We want to reflect on our equality and similarities.

The Northern Paiute community at this time was thriving upon a subsistence pattern of fishing, hunting wild game, and foraging for pine nuts and roots such as Cyperus esculentus. Community events centered on the observance of seasonal ceremonies such as harvests or hunting. In , Hawthorne Wodziwob , a Paiute man, organized a series of community dances to announce a vision. He spoke of a journey to the land of the dead and of promises made to him by the souls of the recently deceased. They promised to return to their loved ones within a period of three to four years. He urged the populace to dance the common circle dance as was customary during a time of celebration. He continued preaching this message for three years with the help of a local "weather doctor" named Tavibo, father of Jack Wilson. This and other European diseases killed approximately one-tenth of the total population, [6] resulting in widespread psychological and emotional trauma. The disruption brought disorder to the economic system and society. Many families were prevented from continuing their nomadic lifestyle. Round Dance influence[edit] A round dance is a circular community dance held, usually around an individual who leads the ceremony. Round dances may be ceremonial or purely social. Usually the dancers are accompanied by a group of singers who may also play hand drums in unison. The dancers join hands to form a large circle. The dancers move to their left with a side-shuffle step to reflect the long-short pattern of the drum beat , bending their knees to emphasize the pattern. During his studies of the Pacific Northwest tribes the anthropologist Leslie Spier used the term " prophet dances " to describe ceremonial round dances where the participants seek trance , exhortations and prophecy. Spier studied peoples of the Columbia plateau a region including Washington , Oregon , Idaho , and parts of western Montana. The Prophet[edit] Wovokaâ€™ Northern Paiute spiritual leader and creator of the Ghost Dance Jack Wilson, the prophet otherwise known as Wovoka , was believed to have had a vision during a solar eclipse on January 1, It was reportedly not his first time experiencing a vision; but as a young adult, he claimed that he was then better equipped, spiritually, to handle this message. He was known throughout Mason Valley as a gifted and blessed young leader. Mooney confirmed that his message matched that given to his fellow Indians. He also stated that Jesus was being reincarnated on earth in , that the people must work, not steal or lie, and that they must not engage in the old practices of war or the traditional self-mutilation practices connected with mourning the dead. He preached that if the five-day dance was performed in the proper intervals, the performers would secure their happiness and hasten the reunion of the living and deceased. Because the first European contact with the practice came by way of the Lakota, their expression "Spirit Dance" was adopted as a descriptive title for all such practices. This was subsequently translated as "Ghost Dance". Early in the religious movement, many tribes sent members to investigate the self-proclaimed prophet, while other communities sent delegates only to be cordial. Regardless of their initial motivations, many left as believers and returned to their homeland preaching his message. The Ghost Dance was also investigated by many Mormons from Utah , for whom the concepts of the Indian prophet were familiar and often accepted. An elaboration of the Ghost Dance concept was the development of ghost shirts , which were special clothing that warriors could wear. They were rumored to repel bullets through spiritual power. It is uncertain where this belief originated. Scholars believe that in chief Kicking Bear introduced the concept to his people, the Lakota, [9] while James Mooney argued that the most likely source is the Mormon temple garment which Mormons believe protect the pious wearer from evil. This Lakota interpretation included the removal of all European Americans from their lands. The Lakota were expected to farm and raise livestock, and to send their children to boarding schools. With the goal of assimilation, the schools taught English and Christianity, as well as American cultural practices. Generally, they forbade inclusion of Indian traditional culture and language. To help support the Lakota during the period of transition, the Bureau of Indian Affairs BIA was to supplement the Lakota with food and to hire white farmers as teachers for the people. The farming plan failed to take into account the difficulty that Lakota farmers would have in trying to cultivate crops in the semi-arid region of South Dakota. By the end of the growing season, a time of intense heat and low rainfall, it was clear that the land was unable to produce substantial agricultural yields. They cut rations for the Lakota in half. With the bison having been virtually eradicated a few years earlier, the Lakota were at risk of starvation. Those who had been residing in the area for a long time recognized that the ritual was often held shortly before battle was to occur. He claimed the Hunkpapa spiritual leader Sitting Bull was the real leader of the movement. A former agent, Valentine McGillicuddy, saw nothing extraordinary in the dances and ridiculed the panic that seemed to have overcome the agencies, saying: Why should not the Indians have the same privilege? If the troops remain, trouble is sure to come. Army troops were deployed to the reservation. On December 15, , Sitting Bull was arrested for failing to stop his people from practicing the Ghost Dance. He instantly wheeled and shot Sitting Bull, hitting him in the left side, between the tenth and eleventh ribs; [16] this exchange resulted in deaths on both sides, including that of Sitting Bull. He was stopped while en route to convene with the remaining Lakota chiefs. Army officers forced him to relocate with his people to a small camp close to the Pine Ridge Agency. Here the soldiers could more closely watch the old chief. That evening, December 28, the small band of Lakota erected their tipis on the banks of Wounded Knee Creek. The following day, during an attempt by the officers to collect weapons from the band, one young, deaf Lakota warrior refused to relinquish his arms. When the fighting had concluded, 25 U. Among the dead Lakota, most were women and children. Aftermath[edit] Outrage in the eastern United States emerged as the public learned about the deaths. Many Americans felt the U. Army actions were unduly harsh; some related the massacre at Wounded Knee Creek to the "ungentlemanly act of kicking a man when he is already down". Like most Indian ceremonies, it became clandestine rather than dying out completely. Rejection[edit] Despite the widespread acceptance of the Ghost Dance movement, Navajo leaders described the Ghost Dance as "worthless words" in Another factor was cultural norms among the Navajo, which inculcated a fear of ghosts and spirits, based on religious beliefs. Instead, it went underground. Wovoka continued to spread its message, along with Kicking Bear, Short Bull and other spiritual leaders. In her book, Ms. Brave Bird writes that ghost dances continue as private ceremonies.

The dancing was superb, the music outstanding and the message was potent, timely and positive. Is justice meant for all of us or is it currently meant for only some of us? Is justice directed primarily toward white men or does it include women and people of color? JoyUS JustUS is in response to those questions and it demonstrates to us that we are of one family, and just like the earth, come in a multitude of colors. The house curtain was up when we entered the theater. A small number of people were seated on either side of the stage and five beautiful multi-colored Altar Quilts by Emily Orling hung upstage as a backdrop throughout the evening. The mood shifted dramatically as the lighting snapped to bright red and several dancers filled the stage with wonderful energetic movement. The beautiful Lighting Design by Tuce Yasak was at work here as the red imperceptibly melted back to normal. The opening group section involving 6 dancers, expressed unity via a tasteful fusion of styles. Latin samba incorporated hints of contemporary dance, hip hop and Afro-Dance. The scene and mood changed again as we heard Alvarez describing the first time she and her husband met their day-old adopted son while the amazing Jannet Galdamez performed a riveting solo with a samba feel, body isolations and whirling dervish-style spins. Later, they joined company members to create an approaching crowd that then receded into the distance. With another dramatic light shift to reveal a grid-like pattern on the stage floor, dancers began walking geometrically, almost robotic-like, before the scene transformed into a protest. This peaceful protest became a riot with gun shots heard via a powerful, yet haunting music score. Through necessity, a daily routine of fitting in or remaining invisible suddenly morphed into survival mode through resistance, injury and death. A trio of women performed to another haunting song with lyrics that included words heard far too often to describe people migrating to this country: Alien, illegal, refugee, permanent resident. But, Alvarez did not allow us to sit and simmer in this emotion for long. Hope was her message and she took us there again. One of the cast members that stood out throughout the evening as a dancer, singer, percussionist and vocal sound making marvel, was the multi-talented Samad Raheem Guerra. The message of JoyUS JustUS continued with a section celebrating the colors of our skins; as different as the colors in nature and ended on a high note with the Arlo Guthrie song This Land is Your Land that then evolved into the entire audience standing and joining in on the celebration of our diversity and oneness. The dynamic, mood enhancing and original music was by d. The wonderful and apropos costumes were designed by Charlese Antinoette, and the Dramaturgy and Theatrical support was provided by Daniel Penilla. Urban Latin Dance Theater. Sigh. Dance of the Vampires. Those were the days back on the old www.enganchecubano.com message board. The audience was definitely laughing at it. The show was a disaster.

Wovoka also known as Jack Wilson delivered his message orally, and it was transcribed by a member of the group who had attended Carlisle Indian School. Mooney renders the "Carlisle English" of this transcription in a more grammatical form. Dance four successive nights, and the last night keep us the dance until the morning of the fifth day, when all must bathe in the river and then disperse to their homes. You must all do in the same way. I, Jack Wilson, love you all, and my heart is full of gladness for the gifts you have brought me. When you get home I shall give you a good cloud [rain? I give you a good spirit and give you all good paint. I want you to come again in three months, some from each tribe there [the Indian Territory]. There will be a good deal of snow this year and some rain. In the fall there will be such a rain as I have never given you before. Grandfather [a universal title of reverence among Indians and here meaning the messiah] says, when your friends die you must not cry. You must not hurt anybody or do harm to anyone. You must not fight. It will give you satisfaction in life. This young man has a good father and mother. Do not tell the white people about this. Jesus is now upon the earth. He appears like a cloud. The dead are still alive again. I do not know when they will be here; maybe this fall or in the spring. When the time comes there will be no more sickness and everyone will be young again. Do not refuse to work for the whites and do not make any trouble with them until you leave them. When the earth shakes [at the coming of the new world] do not be afraid. It will not hurt you. I want you to dance every six weeks. Make a feast at the dance and have food that everybody may eat. Then bathe in the water. You will receive good words again from me some time. Do not tell lies.

My sister and I both dance at the same studio, which used to be really fun. But as we've gotten more serious about our training, things have become tense. We're competitive people, and since we're only a couple of years apart in age, we're often up for the same parts, which leads to a lot of awkwardness and frustration.
