The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Night-Time is a mystery novel by British writer Mark Haddon. The title quotes the fictional detective Sherlock Holmes in Arthur Conan Doyle's short story "The Adventure of Silver Blaze".

His investigation is at times aided, and at other times hampered, by the mild form of autism he lives with. After Christopher hits a policeman in a misunderstanding at the scene of the crime, the police take Christopher into custody. They release Christopher with only a stern warning, under the condition that he promises to them and to his father not to look into the murder any further. Christopher chronicles his investigation in a book—the book we are reading—as part of a school assignment. Ignoring repeated warnings from his father, Christopher investigates the crime scene and conducts interviews with the residents of his block. He uncovers a more tangled plot than was first apparent when he discovers that his father and the owner of the slain dog, Mrs. Shears, had a romantic affair. He subsequently learns that their affair began in reaction to another relationship, one carried on between Mr. At school, Christopher prepares for an A-level math exam that will enable him to attend a university, a feat no other child at his school has managed. He also continues to work on his book. Upon returning home one afternoon, Christopher accidentally leaves his book in plain view on the kitchen table. His father reads it, becomes angry, and confiscates it. The letters chronicle a life that his mother has continued to lead with Mr. Shears in London and contain repeated requests for Christopher to respond. When Father comes home and realizes what has happened, he breaks down in tears. Christopher, now terrified of his father and feeling he can no longer trust him, sneaks out of the house and travels to London to live with his mother. During a harrowing journey, he copes with and overcomes the social fears and limitations of his condition, dodges police, and almost gets hit by a train. Christopher settles in for a time at his mother and Mr. Shears to return to Swindon. Christopher moves into a new apartment with his mother and begins to receive regular visits from his father. At school, Christopher sits for his A-level math exam and receives an A grade, the best possible score. The novel ends with Christopher planning to take more A-level exams in physics and further math, and then attend a university in another town.

What characters do we meet in the first chapters of the book? He is brave, calm and logical, just like an adult. But he is also curious, innocent and honest, just like a kid. Because he would like to use prime numbers. Re-read the opening paragraph. Discuss the length of the sentences. How does the length of sentences affect the tone of the opening paragraph? Why do you think Christopher like this? So all he wrote are facts and it gives a impassive tone of the opening paragraph. Christopher understands smile face and sad face because he felt happy and sad before. But the other emotions are too complicated that he has never felt before. Chapter 7 What appeals to Christopher about detective stories? Can you explain why? Chapter 11 Why does Christopher hit the policeman? The policeman asked too much questions too quickly and Christopher found it hard to answer properly without enough time so he was a bit crush down. He pressed his head onto the ground, the police took of his arms and lifted him onto his feet. Christopher hates the policeman touching himself that way. So he was mad and he hit him. Page 15 How are prime numbers like life, according to Christopher? What does he mean by this? Prime numbers are very logical but you could never work out the rules, even if you spent all your time thinking about them. And a simile is when you describe something by comparing another something which is similar to it. Christopher thinks that telling a lie is too difficult because a lie to him is too complicated. Christopher was told that his mother was died 2 years ago by heart attack in the hospital. Chapter 47 How does Christopher explain the link he makes between seeing red cars and having a good day? What character qualities does Christopher have that would make him a good detective? He is very logical, calm, mull, justicial and brave. How does Christopher work out who his prime suspect is? He drew a map of his neighbor and he made a chain of questions to ask his neighborhoods. What do you think about this? And a white lie to him is where you tell the truth. Which means white lies are no lies to him. But actually white lies are real lies and with a good purpose or reason. Chapter 83 What makes Christopher think he would make a good astronaut? Do you agree he would qualify? He thinks he is intelligent and calm.
