It has streets and public squares, but it lacks the buildings. They will follow, however, for the railroad is coming, and a rich farming region will center there. The town is laid out beside the irrigation ca. Over this ditch, in Mexico, is the embryo town of Mexicala, which consists of a single row of thatched huts and adobes strung along beside the ca. Nearly every building is a saloon or gambling den, or both. The town boasts of a population of three hundred souls, with but a single white man. None of the towns in the Imperial country on this side of the line sell intoxicating liquors. This makes Mexicala the Mecca for the "spirituously" inclined. The liquor obtainable there is of a brand known as mescal, and there is murder in every gla. In proof of this a. There are three or four tents among the mesquites which border Blue Lake, and there is a general store, post-office, and dwelling combined. The building, as well as the business thereof, is composite. It is made partly of boards, partly of tent cloth, and partly of poles, thatched with greasewood boughs. The proprietor of the establishment, Dan Browning, is a red-faced frontiersman who has faith in the future of his city, and he is in on the ground floor. To the visitor, however, all these metropolitan wonders appear to be simply desert. Imperial has the one church of the desert. It is a small wooden structure--the first wooden building in the valley--which is whitewashed on the outside. It has two years the start of its sister towns and it looks down upon them with disdain. Some of the infant cities have designs upon their big sister, however, and they mean to outstrip her in the near future. Brawley is one of these ambitious towns. Heber is another and Holten is still another. Plans have been perfected for the construction of a grand boulevard which will pa. This street will be one of the wonders of the State when completed. It is to be one hundred feet wide and thirty-five miles long, and will be so level that it cannot be determined with the eye which way the street inclines. Along either side of the way and down through the center of the thoroughfare will be rows of trees to shut off from the street the glare of the desert sun. Also on either side will be small ca. When completed it will require but two men to keep the entire street in order. With this glimpse of the work of reclamation which is taking place in the desert thus afforded the reader, I will drop the subject and bring the final chapter to an end. The death of the desert will be a beautiful one. There will be no lack of flowers to lay upon its bier. Its grimness and fierceness and terrors will have given place to peace, plenty, and prosperity. The region of death will be transformed into a kingdom of life.

The primary meanings it has are "induct" and "initiate". Secondary meanings include "introduce", "make someone aware of something", "train", "familiarize", "give first experience of something". Its figurative meaning is to be initiated into the "mystery revelation". The meaning derives from the initiatory rites of the pagan mysteries. The term means "anything hidden", a mystery or secret, of which initiation is necessary. A particular meaning it took in Classical antiquity was a religious secret or religious secrets, confided only to the initiated and not to be communicated by them to ordinary mortals. In the Septuagint and the New Testament the meaning it took was that of a hidden purpose or counsel, a secret will. It is sometimes used for the hidden wills of humans, but is more often used for the hidden will of God. Elsewhere in the Bible it takes the meaning of the mystic or hidden sense of things. It is used for the secrets behind sayings, names, or behind images seen in visions and dreams. The Vulgate often translates the Greek term to the Latin sacramentum sacrament. These followers of mystery religions belonged to a select group, where access was only gained through an initiation. The terms are first found connected in the writings of Heraclitus. Such initiates are identified in texts with the persons who have been purified and have performed certain rites. Such initiates were believers in the god Dionysus Bacchus who took on the name of their god and sought an identification with their deity. Hesychasm , Contemplative prayer , and Apophatic theology Deriving from Neo-Platonism and Henosis , mysticism is popularly known as union with God or the Absolute. For example, in Advaita Vedanta, there is only one reality Brahman and therefore nothing other than reality to unite with itâ€”Brahman in each person atman has always in fact been identical to Brahman all along. Dan Merkur also notes that union with God or the Absolute is a too limited definition, since there are also traditions which aim not at a sense of unity, but of nothingness , such as Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite and Meister Eckhart. Religious ecstasy , Altered state of consciousness , Cognitive science of religion , Neurotheology , and Attribution psychology Mysticism involves an explanatory context, which provides meaning for so-called mystical and visionary experiences, and related experiences like trances. According to Dan Merkur, mysticism may relate to any kind of ecstasy or altered state of consciousness, and the ideas and explanations related to them. These experiences are not necessarily interpreted in a religious framework. Enlightenment spiritual , Divine illumination , and Subitism Some authors emphasize that mystical experience involves intuitive understanding of the meaning of existence and of hidden truths, and the resolution of life problems. According to Larson, "mystical experience is an intuitive understanding and realization of the meaning of existence. Horne, mystical illumination "a central visionary experience [The term illumination is derived from the Latin illuminatio , applied to Christian prayer in the 15th century. Spirituality , Spiritual development , Self-realization , and Ego death Other authors point out that mysticism involves more than "mystical experience. Greco-Roman mysteries , Early Christianity , and Esoteric Christianity In early Christianity the term "mystikos" referred to three dimensions, which soon became intertwined, namely the biblical, the liturgical and the spiritual or contemplative. In western Christianity it was a counter-current to the prevailing Cataphatic theology or "positive theology". Theoria enabled the Fathers to perceive depths of meaning in the biblical writings that escape a purely scientific or empirical approach to interpretation. Middle Ages This threefold meaning of "mystical" continued in the Middle Ages. It is best known nowadays in the western world from Meister Eckhart and John of the Cross. Early modern meaning[edit] See also: By the middle of the 17th century, "the mystical" is increasingly applied exclusively to the religious realm, separating religion and "natural philosophy" as two distinct approaches to the discovery of the hidden meaning of the universe. Western esotericism , Theosophy Blavatskian , Syncretism , Spirituality , and New Age The 19th century saw a growing emphasis on individual experience, as a defense against the growing rationalism of western society. The historical evidence, however, does not support such a narrow conception of mysticism. These traditions include practices to induce religious or mystical experiences, but also ethical standards and practices to enhance self-control and integrate the mystical experience into daily life. Dan Merkur notes, though, that mystical practices are often separated from daily religious practices, and restricted to "religious specialists like monastics, priests, and other renunciates. Shamanism According to Dan Merkur, shamanism may be regarded as a form of mysticism, in which the world of spirits is accessed through religious ecstasy. The term is also used to describe similar magico-religious practices found within the ethnic religions of other parts of Asia, Africa, Australasia and the Americas. Neoshamanism comprises an eclectic range of beliefs and practices that involve attempts to attain altered states and communicate with a spirit world, and is associated with New Age practices.
