Constituted as the 1st Bombardment Group Medium on 15 February. Activated on 5 March. On the continent the group hit strong points at Brest and then began to operate against targets in Germany. Took part in the Battle of the Bulge, December - January, by hitting communications to deprive the enemy of supplies and reinforcements. Bombed transportation, storage facilities, and other objectives until the war ended; also dropped propaganda leaflets. The group remained in the theater to serve with United States Air Forces in Europe as part of the army of occupation at Kitzingen, Germany. It was transferred, without personnel and equipment, to the United States on 15 February and was inactivated on 31 March. The 1st Bombardment Group was bestowed the lineage, history, honors, and colors of the 1st Bombardment Group. With its return to New York state control in 1946, the 1st was again equipped with B-24 Invaders, the aircraft being returned from combat duty in Korea. The 1st trained in proficiency with the attack bomber until the removal of the B-24 from bombing duties in 1954 as neared the end of their service lives. With the Starfire, the 1st began standing end of runway air defense alert, ready to launch interceptors if ADC Ground Intercept Radar picked up an unidentified target. The squadron stood air defense alert from one hour before sunrise until one hour after sunset every day, days a year. It upgraded its inventory to provide a capability for long range over-water missions using the aerial refueling capabilities of the KC-10 and Sikorsky HH-60 Pave Hawk rescue helicopters. After the midair explosion of the Space Shuttle "Challenger" in 1985, the 1st Rescue Wing was designated to provide support for every shuttle launch thereafter. In October 1985, an HH-60 and a tanker flew to an endangered sailboat about 100 miles south of its base. The Pave Hawk and KC-10 dropped survival gear to the vessel, which was riding out the storm, and began their return to base. Both aircraft encountered severe weather conditions and the helicopter was unable to take on fuel. The HH-60 was forced to ditch in the Atlantic Ocean about 60 miles south of the base in what would later become known as "the Perfect Storm", and all but one member of the crew were saved by the crew of the United States Coast Guard cutter Tamaroa. The 1st Rescue Wing has assisted the state in battling the "Sunrise Wildfires" in the Hamptons, they were first on the scene after the crash of TWA Flight 108, and the recovery of the wreckage from the plane flown by John F. Kennedy. The squadron located the transponder of the wreckage of the plane underwater. In 1985, the wing carried out the longest over-water rescue mission in an HH-60. In 1985, Air Force Special Operations Command re-organized Air National Guard rescue wings, establishing separate squadrons for fixed-wing, helicopter and pararescue.
