Her father was a maintenance supervisor for a charity organization, and her mother worked most of her career as an elementary school teacher of English and math at the Beethoven School in Chicago. Jemison says that as a young girl growing up in Chicago she always assumed she would get into space. She ended up doing a whole project about pus. I was just like every other kid. I loved space, stars and dinosaurs. I always knew I wanted to explore. At the time of the Apollo airing, everybody was thrilled about space, but I remember being irritated that there were no women astronauts. People tried to explain that to me, and I did not buy it. I took all kinds of dance – African dancing, ballet, jazz, modern – even Japanese dancing. I wanted to become a professional dancer," said Jemison. I think that people sometimes limit themselves and so rob themselves of the opportunity to realise their dreams. For me, I love the sciences and I also love the arts," says Jemison. I would ask a question and a professor would act as if it was just so dumb, the dumbest question he had ever heard. By the time the plane reached Germany with Jemison and the volunteer on board, she had been up with the patient for 56 hours. Making her only flight in space, Jemison was joined by five other NASA astronauts and a Japanese payload specialist for eight days of research in support of the SLJ mission, a joint effort between Japan and United States. Jemison also conducted experiments on weightlessness and motion sickness on herself and six other crew members. It was such a significant moment because since I was a little girl I had always assumed I would go into space," Jemison added. Rich, Jemison also took into orbit a photo of Coleman – Coleman was the very first African-American woman to ever fly an airplane. STS was a cooperative mission between the United States and Japan that included 44 Japanese and United States life science and materials processing experiments. Jemison logged hours, 30 minutes, 23 seconds in space. But a pencil is technology. Any language is technology. Technology is a tool we use to accomplish a particular task and when one talks about appropriate technology in developing countries, appropriate may mean anything from fire to solar electricity.
