Furthermore, an Arabic word, like a Hebrew or Aramaic word, may have a range of meanings depending on the context – a feature present in all Semitic languages, when compared to the moderately analytic English, Latin, and Romance languages – making an accurate translation even more difficult. Translations into other languages are necessarily the work of humans and so, according to Muslims, no longer possess the uniquely sacred character of the Arabic original. Since these translations necessarily subtly change the meaning, they are often called "interpretations" [2] or "translation[s] of the meanings" with "meanings" being ambiguous between the meanings of the various passages and the multiple possible meanings with which each word taken in isolation can be associated, and with the latter connotation amounting to an acknowledgement that the so-called translation is but one possible interpretation and is not claimed to be the full equivalent of the original. A part of this is the innate difficulty of any translation; in Arabic, as in other languages, a single word can have a variety of meanings. This factor is made more complex by the fact that the usage of words has changed a great deal between classical and modern Arabic. Investigating that context usually requires a detailed knowledge of hadith and sirah, which are themselves vast and complex texts. This introduces an additional element of uncertainty which cannot be eliminated by any linguistic rules of translation. However, we know nothing about who and for what purpose had made this translation. It is however very probable that it was a complete translation. Later in the 11th century, one of the students of Abu Mansur Abdullah al-Ansari wrote a complete tafsir of the Quran in Persian. The manuscripts of all three books have survived and have been published several times. In, translations in languages were known. According to modern scholars [citation needed], the translation tended to "exaggerate harmless text to give it a nasty or licentious sting" and preferred improbable and unpleasant meanings over likely and decent ones. All editions contained a preface by Martin Luther. In the fifteenth century, Juan of Segovia produced another translation in collaboration with the Mudejar writer, Isa of Segovia. Only the prologue survives. In the early seventeenth century, another translated was made, attributed to Cyril Lucaris. These later translations were quite inauthentic, and one even claimed to be published in Mecca in AH. There were lost translations in Catalan, one of them by Francesc Pons Saclota in, the other appeared in Perpignan in. The Italian translation was used to derive the first German translation Salomon Schweigger in in Nuremberg, which in turn was used to derive the first Dutch translation in. The Du Ryer translation also fathered many re-translations, most notably an English version by Alexander Ross in. This was followed two centuries later in Paris by the translation by Kasimirski who was an interpreter for the French Persian legation. This work of Muhammad Hamidullah continues to be reprinted and published in Paris and Lebanon as it is regarded as the most linguistically accurate of all translation although critics may complain there is some loss of the spirit of the Arabic original. Since then, there have been English translations by the clergyman John Medows Rodwell in, and Edward Henry Palmer in, both showing in their works a number of mistakes of mistranslation and misinterpretation, which brings into question their primary aim. Among the contemporary Muslim scholars Dr. This translation has gone through over 30 printings by several different publishing houses, and is one of the most popular amongst English-speaking Muslims, alongside the Pickthall and Saudi-sponsored Hilali-Khan translations.
