Edit When an entire solar system begins to disintegrate into cosmic rubble, Captain Kirk suspects that rumors of a new Klingon super weapon are all too true. What is destroying the Tautee system? The USS Enterprise must uncover the truth before the catastrophe extends beyond Tautee to threaten the very nature of reality itself. Summary Edit In the year , the Kanst Energy Center worked to harness the energy produced by fusion in the outer planets of the system and to deliver that energy via microwave transmission deeper into the inhabited planets. However, overseen by two Tautean scientists, Prescott and Folle, the project resulted in the horrific disintegration of all fifteen planets of the Tautee system. While Prescott burdens herself with the belief that she caused the destruction of her entire race, Folle and other surviving scientists attempt to send a signal to other survivors in hopes of rescue. Meanwhile, when a series of subspace waves begins emanating from the pre-warp Tautee system, the USS Enterprise is dispatched to investigate. Long-range scans have shown that some, if not all, of the planets of the Tautee system have broken apart. The Tautee system fails under the area covered by the Organian Peace Treaty, and the Klingons are looking for almost any reason to move into the disputed area. We have also heard rumors of the Klingons developing a new superweapon. My personal hope is that these rumors are false. We have one other concern. A team surveyed the Tautee system ten years ago, and found a spacetraveling pre-warp culture insufficiently developed to have contact with the Federation. We are to arrive as quickly as we can, not just to stop any problems with the Klingons but also to see if the Tautee peoples were able to save themselves. Admiral Hoffman reminded me that the Prime Directive is in effect in all matters regarding the Tautean people. Farragut, captained by Kelly Bogle, has been ordered to the Tautee system to give us backup if needed. Since I served with Kelly Bogle on the Farragut, this should prove to be an interesting reunion. When the Enterprise arrives, James Kirk wonders if the terrifying destruction wrought on the system might be the result of a new, rumored Klingon super-weapon. After a skirmish in which the Klingon commander KerDaq insinuates that the destruction is the result of a Federation super-weapon, Kirk decides to make an attempt to rescue the survivors, despite the Prime Directive and the pre-warp status of the aliens. Amidst the survivors, Prescott identifies herself as the leader to Leonard McCoy and the doctor accompanies her to the bridge where she can provide the Captain with some explanation of what happened. As the Farragut and Enterprise science officers investigate the subspace tear at the edge of the Tautee system, Kirk and the Farragut captain Kelly Bogle debate the particulars of the Prime Directive as more and more survivors are discovered. However, when it is discovered that the subspace tear will continue to expand and encroaching upon nearby Federation systems, Kirk, Bogle, and KerDaq agree to cooperate in sealing it. Yet one final detail gives them pause when Spock explains that the aftershocks will destroy the fragile debris cradling the Tautean survivors. Kirk reasons to Bogle that since the actions of the Starfleet officers to seal the tear will result in Tautean deaths, the Prime Directive does not apply and that they must rescue all of the survivors before sealing the rift. In the climactic final moments, the Klingon vessels under KerDaq , the Farragut and Enterprise cooperate in sealing the rift after a final last-ditch effort to save another thousand Tautearians but when the Klingons and Farragut warp away to avoid the calamitous aftershocks, they discover the Enterprise has not followed.

The Tautee system houses a flourishing pre-Warp civilization not quite ready to join the Federation, so the Prime Directive limits Kirk's ability to prevent the disaster, and to make matters worse his rescue efforts provoke an attack from four Klingon warships.
