1: Justus D. Doenecke: The Independent Institute

Debating Franklin D. Roosevelt's Foreign Policies, by Justus D. Doenecke, Mark A. Stoler Elected an unprecedented four times to the presidency, Franklin D. Roosevelt led the United States through some of the most dramatic and trying foreign and domestic episodes in its history.

When war broke out in Europe in 1914, political leaders in the United States were swayed by popular opinion to remain neutral; yet less than three years later, the nation declared war on Germany. In Nothing Less Than War: Doenecke reappraises the public and private diplomacy of President Woodrow Wilson and his closest advisors and explores in great depth the response of Congress to the war. He also investigates the debates that raged in the popular media and among citizen groups that sprang up across the country as the U. Doenecke, professor emeritus of history at New College of Florida, is the author of ten books. His book, Storm on the Horizon: The Challenge to American Intervention, won the Herbert Hoover Presidential Library Award for the best book on any topic in American history from 1945 to 1995. Nothing Less Than War combines careful attention to diplomacy with an excellent consideration of politics and public opinion. It offers three major contributions: Historians and nonhistorians alike will profit from reading his informed and insightful account of a pivotal period in American diplomatic history. Woodrow Wilson and the Quest for a New World Order Thorough, thoughtful, pointed, and wise, this sprightly, sometimes wry account covers familiar material with fresh insight and commendably a sense of irony. A splendid read for anyone with an interest in Wilson and the war. Woodrow Wilson and the Western Hemisphere, The entry of the United States into World War I is a very complicated event because of its extraordinarily multiple origins, because of the enormous and overwhelming mass of propaganda enveloping it, and because of the strange character of President Wilson. It will be of great use to serious students and researchers of the Great War. Quoting often from the leading writers of the past eighty years who have shaped our views of 1914-1918, Doenecke has simply subsumed them in an inclusive account that deserves a wide audience, including college classes. Foreign Policy at Home and Abroad since Doenecke paints intriguing portraits of leading figures, many now obscure, including Franklin Delano and Theodore Roosevelt and William Jennings Bryan, plus the rich stew of newspapers, magazines, organizations, diplomats, and propagandists who fought over this issue. This is an excellent history. This is a highly readable account filled with fascinating portraits of the luminaries of the day. In his engagingly-written book, Doenecke covers not only well-known incidents such as the sinking of the Lusitania, but also topics less frequently addressed in the literature. His knowledge of the secondary literature in particular is encyclopedic, and his nearly twenty-page bibliographic essay alone makes the book worth study, adding immensely to a thoughtful and impartial account of leaders and events on both sides of the Atlantic. Nothing Less Than War is the best short history of American neutrality currently available. It should stand for many years as the starting point for further research on the topic.

Introduction This essay lists essential historical readings on wars and related matters which have involved or affected the United States plural , starting in The framework is a Rothbardian one, in which wars are not sealed off from domestic politics, the ambitions of state bureaucrats, economic life and motives, and ideological currents. Our goal is to present, in one place, a broad bibliography of works which go against conformist "liberal-internationalist" and now one would have to add "neo-conservative" readings of the history of US foreign relations. Any new interpretation, right or wrong, amounts to a revision of some previously accepted view. In the case of foreign affairs, revisionism is of critical importance. Each official reading of a war becomes an honored precedent to be referred to when debating any new situation which could give rise to war. Thus, US policy-makers typically believe, or pretend to believe, that any new crisis comes down to a case of Fort Sumter, , or Munich, It follows, then, that whatever was done at such times provides valuable guidance. Anyone who doubts this is invited to note the many references to World War II, Pearl Harbor, Lincoln, and so on, which have filled the press since September 11, Official readings can even be arranged into a seamless series exhibiting the same causes and, therefore, demanding the same or analogous responses. Thus is created a sort of "myth of the eternal return" with respect to US foreign relations. In this mythical world, the United States bumbles along amiably and in utter conformity with international law and high-minded principles for years at a time, when it is "suddenly and deliberately attacked" out of the blue, for no discernible reason, by forces of total evil. If the seamless web of US innocent-bystanderhood is broken, however, things take on a far different look. This is all to the good, as it makes possible a genuine understanding of our situation and, at the same time, makes it possible to think of alternatives to officially offered policy options, which are usually limited to sanctions, bombing, more bombing, or invasion. The late Murray Rothbard made a useful distinction between "narrow" and "broad" revisionism as regards US foreign relations. Those of the former school concerned themselves with the causes of the two world wars. Without a broader framework such writers fell prey to the Cold War, or any other cause or crusade, provided only that it was unconnected with European affairs from Broad revisionists, by contrast, concerned themselves with wars and the causes of wars, generally, and were thus led to question much conventional wisdom about states, international relations, and the formation of public opinion. Thus, it is no accident that libertarians with their critical view of states and state behavior should be among those interested in war and imperialism, both of which represent a widening of state power first abroad, and then at home. War and empire, whatever immediate benefits they confer on those in position to enjoy such benefits, multiply the opportunities for a state to extend its power over its "own" citizens and their wealth. Libertarians and classical liberals have not had this field all to themselves, however. Old-line Progressives like Charles Beard and Harry Elmer Barnes, for example, became great critics of the drive to intervention in , and found themselves allied with right-wing Republicans with whom they previously had little in common. Similarly, Leftists and Marxists sometimes ask very good questions about the interest and motivation of political actors and states and do very useful research on the basis of such questions. We may profit from their work, while disagreeing with their ultimate values. Here, we are interested in useful books and essays which shed light on war and peace. There is not enough space to analyze or quarrel with the politics of each item listed. The discerning reader will have to make allowance for such things. The net has been cast fairly wide here, in the direction of the broadest possible revisionism. Useful "mainstream" works are also cited from time to time. No pretense is made of providing "balance": The end product is, I hope, a politically varied but thematically focused list of readings on war, peace, and states. Foner and Richard C. Homes and Meier, is a useful collection of documents. See also, Arthur A. Atheneum, , The Civilian and the Military: The War for Southern Independence: Open Court, ,

You may choose whether you wish to do Option A or Option B. If you do both, I will count only the higher grade. Any paper turned in more than a week late will not be accepted. Keep them in mind as you complete the reading assignments. Class participation is important and will count heavily in your final grade. Since not everyone is comfortable speaking in front of others, your performance on the quizzes will also be considered in calculating your participation grade. Quizzes There will be a quiz on each of the books, and, if necessary, on some of the other reading assignments as well. If you have done the reading " or even most of it " you should have no difficulty doing well. Homework Assignments In order to help you get the most out of the reading and to prepare you to discuss it in class, there will be occasional short written homework assignments that you will complete as you do the reading. These will be collected in class. Over the course of the semester there will be perhaps of these assignments. You may do as many as you like, but you must do at least two. Midterm and Final Examinations The Midterm and Final Examinations will consist of short answer questions and long essays. You will have a choice of topics for the long essays. You will also receive review questions that will help you study for the short answer questions. You are responsible for bringing an unmarked blue book to the midterm and the final. Paper Assignments The paper assignments will focus on the material covered in the readings and during class discussion. Each paper must be at least words. There will be a choice of topics handed out well before the due date. Since the paper topics will address issues we have previously discussed in class, it will be useful to take notes during our discussions and keep in mind the questions and themes that emerge from these discussions " you will likely see them reappear in the paper topic questions. I do take attendance. Frequent absences will dramatically lower your course grade. Excessive absences will put you in jeopardy of failing the course, regardless of your grades on the written assignments. If you are a person who rarely attends class and relies on copying notes from a friend, you would be best served by registering for another class. Or, perhaps more to the point, you might reconsider why you are in college in the first place. Common Courtesy You are at a university among professional people so you should act like you belong here. Do not embarrass yourself by behaving badly. Please turn off and put away all cell phones and other electronic gadgets while you are in class. Please arrive on time and do not walk out in the middle of class unless it is an emergency or you have spoken to me about it ahead of time. Do not talk, listen to music, or surf the internet in class. I can see you, and such behavior is very distracting. Beyond that, rude and disruptive behavior reflects poorly on you and leaves the impression that you are not the kind of person who belongs on a university campus. It also annoys your classmates who are paying good money to be here. Please act courteously and professionally. Academic Honesty Do not lie to me about why you missed class or failed to turn in an assignment. It is unnecessary and it insults my intelligence. Nobody likes to listen to excuses " even semi-legitimate ones. If you want to score points with me, hand me the late assignment, apologize, grin sheepishly if need be, and leave it at that. Admitting you screwed up takes guts, and I respect people who just own up to their mistakes. The chronic excuse makers, on the other hand"!. Do not cheat on quizzes or tests. I will catch you and you will receive an automatic zero for the assignment. Do not plagiarize from written sources or from the web. Any and all plagiarized assignments will receive a grade of zero and put you in jeopardy of failing the course. Your name will be reported to the Office of Student Affairs and will also be circulated among other faculty as someone who lacks integrity. Good luck getting a reference or letter of recommendation if you are on this list. If you are unsure what plagiarism is, please consult with me or the teaching assistant BEFORE you hand in an assignment. Problems I appreciate that many CSUN students are stretching themselves quite thin, often working full time while taking a full load of classes. If you are feeling overwhelmed, find yourself falling behind, or are having any problems outside of class that are adversely affecting your performance in class, be sure to let me know. Do not wait until the end of the semester when it will be too late. Either come to see me or send an email as soon as a problem arises and we can work something out. If you are struggling academically, I will gladly give you extra help. As long as you keep me up to speed, you will find I am a very empathetic, even reasonable person.
