

1: The Seinfeld Kevin Smith Shared Universe | simon dunn: scriptwriter & comedian

If you are a Seinfeld fan, this book is a must read. It is the best book I have read about my favorite show and millions of other people's show; the greatest show.

Plot[ edit ] Jerry hires a maid, Cindy played by Angela Featherstone , with whom he then starts sleeping. Elaine discovers she has 57 messages on her answering machine when Kramer attempts to send her a fax. George tries to get a nickname T-Bone , but a co-worker gets it instead. George tries reasoning with the new T-Bone to get the nickname. When he walks into the meeting room carrying a banana, his boss nicknames him Koko , since George was flailing around like a monkey when he was talking to the new T-Bone. The episode also featured the New York area code When the area code ran out of numbers, was created. Annoyed by the nonstop calls from the fax service, Elaine changes her phone number and gets one with the area code. She is not happy with the new number, because she believes the area code makes it too long to dial. She is proved correct when attempting to give her number to a man in the park. Initially eager, he hesitates when he sees the area code and asks if it is in New Jersey. When her neighbor Mrs. Krantz dies, Elaine manages to get her old number. Meanwhile, Kramer breaks up with his girlfriend when she refuses to move, and he gets lost in the Lower East Side. When Jerry goes to pick him up, he spots Cindy and slows down to give her her money - unfortunately, a patrolling NYPD unit mistakes them for a prostitute and a John. Later, a lost Kramer is approached by Maxwell played by Anthony Crivello and is talked into a maid job, joking about the similarities between the scene and Kramer being approached by a pimp. As Kruger begins to talk about removing a stain, Coco mentions her Gammy when she was in Jamaica, but George interrupts her, saying no one cares about her Gammy. As Kruger wonders who is Gammy and saying there should be one, he decides to give George the nickname "Gammy". As everyone including Coco eagerly chants "Gammy", George says "Gammy is getting upset! Kramer calls Jerry from the intersection of 1st Street and 1st Avenue , which he describes as "The Nexus of the Universe". This realization inspired the opening of the "Nexus lounge".

2: Seinfeld (Curb Your Enthusiasm) - Wikipedia

An account of the history and development of the American comedy series starring Jerry Seinfeld. The book includes personal details of the actors, an interview with the show's creator, and a wealth of background material. To ask other readers questions about The Seinfeld Universe, please sign up. Be.

The principal characters are not related by family or work connections but remain distinctively close friends throughout the series. Two prominent recurring characters were based on well-known people: Jacopo Peterman of the J. Other characters based on real people include the Soup Nazi [37] and Jackie Chiles , who was based on Johnnie Cochran. Rapid scene-shifts between plot lines bring the stories together. Occasionally, story arcs span multiple episodes and even entire seasons, the most memorable being season four , which revolved around the pilot pitch to NBC by Jerry and George. Other examples are Kramer getting his jacket back and Elaine heading the "Peterman catalog". A major difference between Seinfeld and sitcoms which preceded it is that the principal characters never learn from their mistakes. In effect, they are indifferent and even callous towards the outside world and sometimes one another. More often in every episode, situations resolve with characters getting a justly deserved comeuppance. After it aired, a pickup by NBC seemed unlikely and the show was offered to Fox , which declined to pick it up. Rick Ludwin , head of late night and special events for NBC, however, diverted money from his budget by canceling a Bob Hope television special , and the next 4 episodes were filmed. At one point NBC considered airing these episodes on Saturdays at Larry David believed that he and Jerry Seinfeld had no more stories to tell, and advised Seinfeld to turn down the order, but Seinfeld agreed to the additional episodes. It settled into a regular time slot on Wednesdays at 9: A few episodes set a benchmark for later seasons. Much publicity followed the controversial episode, " The Contest ", an Emmy Award -winning episode written by co-creator Larry David, whose subject matter was considered inappropriate for prime time network TV. To circumvent this taboo, the word " masturbation " was never used in the script, instead substituted for by a variety of oblique references. NBC moved the series after Ted Danson announced the end of Cheers and Seinfeld quickly surpassed the ratings of the 9: Cheers reruns that spring. Season five was an even bigger ratings-hit, consisting of popular episodes, such as " The Puffy Shirt " in which Jerry feels embarrassed wearing a "pirate" shirt on The Today Show , [56] " The Non-Fat Yogurt " featuring Rudy Giuliani , the Republican then-mayor-elect of New York, [57] and " The Opposite " in which George, doing the opposite of what his instincts tell him he should do, lands a job with the New York Yankees and Elaine leaves "Pendant Publishing" because of a comedy of errors that lead to its demise. Another story arc has George returning to live with his parents. In the midst of the story arc, Kramer creates and promotes his coffee table book. Seinfeld was nominated for the same award every year for its entire run but always lost to Frasier, which went on to win a record thirty-nine Emmy Awards in its eleven-season run. Peterman for the first time. This was the first season in which Seinfeld reached No. In season seven, a story arc involved George getting engaged to his ex-girlfriend, Susan Ross, after the pilot Jerry proved unsuccessful. In it, George spends most of the season regretting and trying to get out of the engagement. The show no longer contained extracts of Jerry performing stand-up comedyâ€”Jerry had no time or energy for this with his new responsibilitiesâ€”and storylines occasionally delved into fantasy and broad humor. For example, in " The Bizarro Jerry ", Elaine is torn between exact opposites of her friends and Jerry dates a woman who has the now-famed "man hands". Despite the enormous popularity and willingness of the cast to return for a tenth season, Seinfeld decided to end the show after season nine, believing he would thereby be able to ensure the show would maintain its quality and go out on top. However, Jerry Seinfeld defused the protestors by not letting this episode continue in syndication, as revealed in "Inside Look" on DVD. The Finale Seinfeld After nine years on the air, NBC and Jerry Seinfeld announced on December 25, , that the series would end production the following spring in Before the finale, a forty-five-minute retrospective clip show, " The Chronicle ", was aired. The retrospective was expanded to an hour after the original airing and aired again on NBC as an hour-long episode, and has since aired in syndication. It was the first episode since the finale of season seven, " The Invitations ", to feature opening and closing stand-up comedy acts by Jerry Seinfeld. The finale was filmed before an audience of NBC executives and friends of the show. The press and public were shut out of the taping in order to keep its plot secret; those who attended the shoot of the final episode were required to sign written "vows of silence". The producers of the show tweaked the media about the hype, spreading a false rumor about Newman ending up in the hospital and Jerry and Elaine sitting in a chapel, presumably to marry. However, the finale received mixed reviews from critics and fans of the show. The finale poked fun at the many rumors that were circulating, seeming to move into multiple supposed plots before settling on its true storyline—a lengthy trial where the gang is prosecuted for violating a " Good Samaritan law " and sentenced to prison terms. The offer NBC made to Seinfeld was over three times higher per episode than anyone on TV had ever been offered before. Steve Bannon , who invested in the show, later said, "We calculated what it would get us if it made it to syndication. We were wrong by a factor of five". Brandon Tartikoff was not convinced that the show would work. Test audiences were even harsher. Seinfeld comments, "We thought, if someone goes in to use this bathroom, this is something they should see. It fits that moment. Ann Jillian would last only a single season of 13 episodes and would be off the air by the end of The pilot first aired on July 5, , and finished second in its time slot against the CBS police drama Jake and the Fatman , [88] receiving a Nielsen rating of Nobody had seen anything like it. These ratings were high enough to secure a second season. This gave NBC an incentive to keep broadcasting the show. The first is that of the network TV non-syndicated versions in the original aspect ratio of 4: Unlike the version used for the DVD, Sony Pictures cropped the top and bottom parts of the frame, while restoring previously cropped images on the sides, from the 35 mm film source, to use the entire For humor to result from this unexpected result, the event must have an appropriate emotional climate, comprised of the setting, characters, prior discourse, relationships of the characters, and the topic. Nod Miller, of the University of East London , has discussed the self-referential qualities of the show: Seinfeld is suffused with postmodern themes. To begin with, the boundary between reality and fiction is frequently blurred: The reaction of the fictional NBC executives, by all accounts, mirrored the initial responses of those who eventually commissioned Seinfeld. The series finale was so replete with references to earlier shows as to render it largely incomprehensible to those not already well-versed in the personae and preoccupations of the Seinfeld universe. A Book about Everything and Nothing.

3: "Seinfeld" The Maid (TV Episode ) - Quotes - IMDb

The Seinfeld Universe has 30 ratings and 4 reviews. Karen said: I wanted to give this stars, really. This was a book that was on my shelf that I hadn.

Create New Jerry is implied in-universe to be extremely well-off financially. So WHY is he living in an old, dilapidated one-bedroom apartment for the duration of the series? NYC rent for starters. Why did George want reparations in "The Betrayal"? Seriously, he got to go to India and sleep with a beautiful woman who he barely knew before going. When Jerry fooled around with her it was before he even went out with her, and the only reason he got to meet her was because of him. A good amount of his desire for Nina came from the fact that Jerry never slept with her. Once he found out that he had and at the exact same time he introduced her to him he felt "betrayed". In fact one of his lines from that episode perfectly sums up his actions in both cases: I turn around for a sip of Tang, and you jump out first! In "The Strongbox," George attempts to break off his current relationship by having an affair. He spends the whole season looking for a way to get out of the engagement via SUSAN breaking it off, and he obviously would have been much happier with Tomei anyway. Alternatively he was so star struck with the thought of being in a relationship with Marisa Tomei that he gave little to no thought about ending his engagement to Susan. In "The Pothole" episode, why in the crap does Elaine go to so much trouble to have some supreme flounder delivered to her, when she could just go to the restaurant and pick it up? She wants the food brought to her; having to go to the restaurant to pick it up is too much hassle. Going to the restaurant would be far less work than going to the trouble of sneaking into a neighboring apartment building and pretending that the storage closet is "Apt. This is positively infuriating to her, and she refuses to give up before she succeeds in making them deliver. Why are George and Jerry, two grown men, so absolutely petrified of Alton Benes? He is just a gruff, elderly man with an eccentric way of speaking. This whole episode is one big Mind Screw. Early Installment Weirdness , probably. Obviously, this changed as he developed into a Deadpan Snarker. The inside looks featurette states that the cast was outright terrified of the actor who played Alton Benes Lawrence Tierney. Their terrified mannerisms were part script, and part actual fear. Why are the characters seen as being bad for what they did to Babu Bhatt? While everyone else who appeared in the finale were people they legitimately wronged out of selfishness, Babu was just someone they tried to help, and his getting deported was an honest mistake. But also, if you remember the episode, they were patting themselves on the back for all the good they did him, which basically amounted to giving him advice. Its like telling a fat person he should eat less and exercise more and then congratulating yourself for helping him lose weight or given the quality of the advice given, its more like telling a fat person he should take an ancient Chinese weight loss herb you saw an ad for on the internet. Frankly, the finale itself is a Just Bugs Me Generally speaking, the asshole things the characters do are as a result of crazy confluences of events and not outright malevolence. Were the characters, generally speaking, selfish? But they were not the sociopaths they were made out to be in the finale until the finale, and the mocking they did of the fat guy being robbed at gunpoint would have been wildly out of character for them for most of the run. I think the concept of the trial and jail could have been really funny, had it been written well. Sure, it might not have been deserved and been ridiculous in a legal sense, but it could have been classic tv comedy, had it not fallen flat. So many of the episodes are ridiculous if you really think about them, but because of good writing and acting, you can suspend your disbelief. Because there is something off about the finale, be it the writing, acting, editing, pacing, directing, or whatever, the flaws outshine everything. I never saw them as bad people or being aware that they were bad people, to say the least. Comics snarky observers of the world around them are usually never portrayed as a bad force, but usually admirable because they cut through the BS. I had thought George had bought the wedding invitations because they were slightly toxic as a sort of last-ditch-will-never-happen-but-worth-a-shot way to get out of marrying Susan If anything, the stationary store is to blame for selling toxic envelopes in the first place. The judge says this But what if the characters died in the plane crash, and this is the afterlife where their souls are being judged? Consider the final scene—what earthly jail would place a woman in a cell with three men? That would mean everyone else in the courtroom is dead. What killed all of these different people, all over and outside of New York City, all at once? After all, mail gets misplaced all the time. The finale is a deconstruction of karmic justice, and the series as a whole deconstructs the very notion of evil. Real-life harm is generally done not by Snidely Whiplash villains, but by oblivious selfish people who, to the limited extent they think of their behavior at all, have shallow rationalizations by which they think of themselves as essentially decent people. How did they get the table in there in the first place? In-universe, the pool table disassembles. Out-universe, the set disassembles. Why do they call him "the Bubble Boy" when he talks like a year-old man? That was the joke. I think the implication maybe they said it, maybe this was WMG that I assumed was canon was that he had been famously a bubble boy as a boy, but he had gone on and lived his life and now was a bubble man. But everyone still remembered him as the "Boy in the Plastic Bubble" a real movie even though he was all grown up. So Elaine talked Jerry into what she thought was a favor for a sick little kid, but of course, the dad is asking him to visit his adult son. Why do we just accept that Seinfeld is a show about nothing? It has two episodes about nothing. I mean, a show where they have an episode where George meets Castro or Jerry reveals fattening yogurt that destroys the David Dinkens reelection campaign is not about nothing. The thing is it was one of the first sitcoms without a wacky hook like a sarcastic butler or a talking cat or a genie or a large wacky family or incompatible neighbors. They lampshade this with "Jerry", which is just Seinfeld with the wacky hook about a sarcastic butler being thrown in. The Cosby Show is about the ordinary day to day life of a Brooklyn family. Is that any more of a hook, or any more "about something" than the life of a comedian and his three friends? Or All in the Family is about the politically incorrect observations of Archie Bunker. Like they say, No Hugging, No Learning. Pretty much every other sitcom before that point was more family oriented and made some sort of attempt at having morals so that the characters would mature and develop to some degree. Seinfeld was different in that it forgoes that completely, basically showing four people just living their lives without really growing at all. And of course All in the Family was "about something" — it was social commentary largely about race relations, which is about as "about something" as you can get. According to Larry David himself, the show is about where comedians get their material. I always assumed it was the above entry; it has no obvious moral or Plot Parallel attached to every episode. Whatever happened to the woman who was impregnated by George due to a defective condom? She turned out not to be pregnant at the end of the episode. Then she disappeared like every other girlfriend of the week, presumably because they broke up in between episodes. I do believe she broke up with George upon seeing his rather odd eating habits gobbling up some pasta like a pig at the end of the episode. Her face says "Wow, even if he did care for me A better question is what happened to the woman Kramer got pregnant. They never said she was pregnant. Kramer said that she was late with her period. What did Susan see in George anyway? Did he have a great sense of humour or something? Was she just settling for the first decent guy to come along? Maybe she really was a lesbian, and George was The Beard. By the time Susan and George were to be married, she was no longer employed at NBC after she was fired because George kissed her in the meeting. Heidi Swedberg, the actress who played Susan, has pointed out before that Susan came from a very dysfunctional family, including two parents who openly hated each other the same way Frank and Estelle Costanza did. Another one about George: I ask and put it that way because the happiness and confidence he gained from doing the opposite only seemed to last for that episode. My guess is that George was too insecure, self-destructive and generally petty to keep it up. Was she just being a bully, or was she out for revenge? The hatred only grew two years later in "The Cartoon". Pretty obvious that his messing around caused the fire, so why does she refuse to pay for it? As for her not causing the damage, since her father was no longer capable of taking care of himself or running his auto shop, she was still responsible for his actions. In her opinion, anyhow. On the other hand, the Universe probably rearranged itself to make Elaine the Butt-Monkey. In the original episode, he is offended when someone speaks Spanish in his line, yet in the finale we learn that after Elaine ruined his business he returned to Then again, if he is literally a Soup Nazi, taking refuge in Argentina makes perfect sense! Why did Puddy suddenly become really religious in one of the last episodes? There was never any reference or mention of him being religious before or hardly any afterwards, for that matter. Not only that, but if he is so religious, how did he not know that he was living in sin by sleeping around with Elaine? But the fact that he lacks the information that fornication is a sin under his faith demonstrates that he is a really lousy Christian.

4: Explore The Seinfeld Universe In This Chart About Nothing

"The Maid" is the 19th episode of the NBC sitcom Seinfeld. This was the 19th episode of the ninth and final season. It aired on April 30,

The announcement made the front page of all the major New York newspapers, including the New York Times. The producers of the show tweaked the media about the hype, spreading a false rumor about Newman ending up in the hospital and Jerry and Elaine sitting in a chapel, presumably to get married [6]. The series ended with a 75 minute episode cut down to 60 minutes in syndication, two parts in which the "New York Four" are sentenced to one year in prison in Latham County, Massachusetts. They are delayed in Latham County after engine trouble caused by Kramer hopping up and down, trying to get water out of his ears, and while killing time in town, they witness a fat man being robbed. Instead of helping him, they make wisecracks about his weight while Kramer videotapes the robbery. The victim sees them doing this, and mentions it to the reporting officer. All four are arrested for breaking a fictional Good Samaritan law that requires citizens to assist in such a situation. A lengthy trial ensues, bringing back many characters from past shows as character witnesses testifying against the group for their "selfish" acts from throughout the series. The four are eventually found guilty, and sentenced to a year in prison, with Judge Arthur Vandelay proclaiming: It literally makes or breaks the shirt. In a last bit of comedy during the credits, Jerry is seen wearing an orange prison suit, doing a stand-up routine of prison-related jokes. I mean when I was a kid my mother wanted me to play in the yard. It was scripted by co-creator Larry David, who returned after a two-season hiatus. It also was the first episode since the 7th season to feature opening and closing stand-up acts by Jerry Seinfeld. The final Seinfeld was criticized by many for being vindictive towards the characters - who are shown to be amoral, selfish misanthropes - and, by extension, towards the audience who tuned in to watch them every week. Some valued it for the perceived in-joke of the four characters being convicted and imprisoned on the charge that they did nothing, a play on the "show about nothing" mantra. Seinfeld finished as the 1 most watched show of its final season. Louis-Dreyfus also appeared on Enthusiasm and has received on-screen and voice credits in television such as Arrested Development and animated film. Richards continues to appear in new film and television work as well. Alexander, Louis-Dreyfus and Richards have all attempted unsuccessfully to launch new sitcoms as title-role characters. Despite decent acclaim and even some respectable ratings each show was cancelled quickly, usually within the first season. However, it was cancelled by CBS in May Patrick Warburton, who played David Puddy, was also hit by the curse when his superhero-themed show, The Tick, was cancelled after just one season. However, he has found success in voice acting. Alexander was also the voice of Duckman, which had a certain amount of success although this series ran from until, which coincided with the run of Seinfeld. Wayne Knight has since had some roles with more or less the same importance of Newman, like the one in the not so successful The Edge, and one as a police officer in 3rd Rock from the Sun. Product placement A recurring feature of Seinfeld was its use of specific products as plot points, especially various candy products. These products might be a central feature of a plot narrative e. Junior Mints, Twix and Pez, or associating the candy with a guest character e. Peterman clothing catalog which actually went bankrupt while the show was still active. For details of a study on the effectiveness of product placement without respect to whether it was paid for or intended to promote products, see "Television Programs and Advertising: Weaver of Penn State University. Two types of advertising, neither of which were actual product placement, also capitalized on the Seinfeld show. One is described as a "Webisode," a reverse form of product placement. In this form, instead of inserting its product into an episode, American Express "inserted" Jerry Seinfeld and an animated Superman voiced by Patrick Warburton, who also acted on the show, playing the role of David Puddy into its commercial. In this type, which ran after the series ended, Alexander behaves much like his character George, and his relationship with Lee Iacocca is said to play on his relationship with George Steinbrenner in the show. Critical Analysis A blog dedicated to the legality of the issues that arise in Seinfeld episodes, Seinfeld Law, has analyzed many of the bizarre and quirky incidents in Seinfeld as they might have played out in a court of law. Music A signature of Seinfeld is its theme music: These short riffs were composed by Jonathan Wolff and are considered groundbreaking in their use as sitcom music. They vary throughout each episode, and are played in an improvised blues-funk style. An additional musical theme with an ensemble, led by a synthesized mid-range brass instrument, ends each episode. Non-original music featured in the show: Elaine tunes into her bedside radio and offers up a few characteristic dance moves. George looks for clues about his work assignment when Wilhelm mentions the song to him. Elaine does the infamous dry heave dance to this. The Entertainment Weekly Seinfeld Companion. A Book about Everything and Nothing. Open Court Publishing Company. Reading the Queer in Seinfeld. In Calvin Thomas Ed. Straight with a Twist: Queer Theory and the Subject of Heterosexuality. University of Illinois Press.

5: The Seinfeld Universe: The Entire Domain Book Download Free - Video Dailymotion

Written by the editor and publisher of "Nothing: The Newsletter for Seinfeld Fans", this book provides information on the history and development of the show, an introduction to the real-life "characters" who inspired their TV counterparts, a tour of New York locations made famous by the show, and.

Share The gang at the Multiplex The series Seinfeld mentions many fictional films, sometimes as major plot elements, sometimes minor plot elements and often as running gags. Contents [ show ] Rochelle, Rochelle Rochelle, Rochelle is a film referenced many times during the series. It is most likely based on the erotic film Emmanuelle. Like other films referenced by the show, it is never shown, but characters are portrayed watching it.. Susan Ross notes that it contains "a lot of nudity. According to reactions to the movie throughout the series, the plot is completely unbearable, but is still revered because of its nudity. Jerry and Elaine end up in the same theater. Indifferent to the audience, they yell out how bad the movie is and then all three walk out. During this scene several bits of dialogue are heard from the movie with Larry David voicing the role of a man convincing Rochelle to undress. It is learned that Rochelle resides in Milan and is visiting relatives in Minsk. According to a trailer overheard in the episode, The Village Voice called the film "a masterpiece. The sixth-season episode " The Understudy " features a Broadway musical adaptation of Rochelle, Rochelle starring Bette Midler , who appears in the episode as herself. She also sings a song with the lyrics "Rochelle Rochelle". At the end of the episode, the understudy is seen performing the title number sample lyric: Unlike other fictional works mentioned throughout the series, Prognosis Negative had its roots in an actual screenplay written by Seinfeld co-creator Larry David in the s. It was never produced. In the episode " The Dog ", Elaine wants to see Prognosis Negative with Jerry, and thus refuses to see it with George when Jerry cannot go because of the dog he is petsitting. Jerry eventually sees it with George while Elaine watches the dog, only to find out that the movie is terrible. Jerry does not tell Elaine that he saw the movie without her and is forced to go see it again with her. Later, in the episode " The Junior Mint ", Elaine states that her friend is "prognosis negative" after surgery. This is actually referenced in the Seinfeld episode " The Pilot, Part 2 ", when George breaks down after hearing that the test results for the possibly cancerous white spot on his lip came out negative, only to be corrected by the doctor on the other end. Robert Weide, who directed the faux documentary which would become the beginning of Curb Your Enthusiasm , met Larry David through his screenplay for Prognosis Negative. The term "prognosis negative" figures prominently in the film Dark Victory, starring Bette Davis. It is released the same day as The English Patient, a movie for which Elaine develops an intense dislike. Elaine later goes to see Sack Lunch alone, but is spotted and scoffed at by her boyfriend. Afterward, Elaine is delighted to hear Sack Lunch announced as the in-flight movie on her trip to Tunisia. One of the burning questions that bothers Elaine is whether the people on the theatrical release poster for the movie got shrunk down or are in a giant sack. The film is apparently supposed to be a reference to light, escapist comedies that have large commercial appeal despite critical responses that are muted at best as opposed to movies like The English Patient, which earn much critical acclaim and Oscar nominations, but find little popularity among the general populace. Dabney Coleman is mentioned as the star of Sack Lunch. Chunnel Chunnel is a film mentioned in the episode " The Pool Guy ". Larry David can be heard saying the line, "Everybody out of the Chunnel! An exchange between a fictional President of the United States and a presidential advisor can additionally be heard: President, your daughter is in the Chunnel. Blimp George sees Blimp: Later, while his car is stuck in traffic, he decides to go see it again with hope of more laughter; however, his plan is thwarted by a fellow moviegoer who uses a laser pointer to make fun of the film. After leaving the film when his line produces no laughter, he is followed by the moviegoer with the laser pointer for the rest of the episode. CheckMate CheckMate is a film at the center of the plot of " The Movie ", ostensibly about chess and intrigue. Jerry, George, Elaine, and Kramer all try to meet up to see the movie together, but because of a series of problems, three of the four, independently, find themselves watching Rochelle, Rochelle instead. The movie poster for the film is visible in the episode. King Voiced by Jerry Seinfeld: Because the king is always in jeopardy. He begins answering the wrong numbers intended for Moviefone and looking up movies for people. Among the films he references: Agent Zero derives its name from a screenplay Seinfeld writer David Mandel always wanted to write. Elaine calls to find out what time it will be showing. Jerry happily discusses the movie with a friend, commenting that at one point, Harrison Ford "jumped out of the plane and was shooting back up at them while he was falling. He calls the film, "a hell of a picture". Ross speaks about this scene, an angry Frank Costanza loudly admonishes Mr. There was later a real action movie with this title starring Howie Long. This movie was also mentioned in an episode of the Irish sitcom Father Ted. In addition, George calls to find out when Chunnel is being shown see above. When Jerry realizes that Brody is bootlegging the movie, he asks to talk to Kramer outside of the theater. According to overheard dialogue, there is a character in the film named "Death Blow. Described by Brody as "an arty movie," Jerry refuses to record a bootleg copy, and Kramer is forced to do it. The film probably takes place at least in part in Paris, as a view of the Eiffel Tower is shown near the end this scene is from a real movie - Forget Paris. However, the rest of the bootlegged copy is taped over by Elaine who wished to see how bad her dancing was. Jerry says that in one scene, a character is "trying to buy back a loaf of his soul," symbolized by a loaf of bread. The Pain and the Yearning: A minute fictitious film, whose plot is simply "An old woman experiences pain and yearning. While at Champagne Video, Kramer claims that Vincent is an "art-house goon" and that he sticks with "Gene picks". Kramer rents The Other Side of Darkness, a movie that went straight to video. The movie is about a woman who goes into a coma, which leads Kramer to ask Jerry to be responsible for removing his life support if he gets stuck in a coma. Other films Blame it on the Rain " The Calzone ": Elaine and her date Todd Gack are forced to see this movie when Means to an End see below is sold out. Possibly a reference to the song of the same title by Milli Vanilli. Means to an End " The Calzone ": Cold Fusion " The Bizarro Jerry ": Jerry mentions plans to see this film with Kramer, who is unable to go because of a long day "working" at Brandt and Leland. The Muted Heart " The Engagement ": Stars Glenn Close and Sally Field. George would like to see Firestorm, but due to his recent engagement with Susan Ross , he is forced to see this film instead. A direct-to-video release about a female coma victim and her husband, played "unforgettabl[y]" by Eric Roberts. The film is longer than two hours and concludes with the coma victim regaining consciousness. Kramer rents this movie and subsequently visits a lawyer to deal with the possibility of himself being in a coma, until he sees the end of the film, at which point he attempts to revoke his living will. In " The Movie ," they discuss the film; George liked it, but Elaine hated it. One scene that especially got to George is when Ponce De Leon and his crew splash around in a supposed Fountain of Youth, only to realize, when he looks in a mirror, that it did not have mystical powers. Jerry dreams about a scene from a sci-fi film while sleeping and wakes to scribble the line "Like flaming globes of Sigmund" down on a piece of paper because he thinks it is funny. He spends the rest of the episode trying to figure out what he wrote. The planets of our solar system, incinerating. Like flaming globes, Sigmund. Ah, ha, ha, ha On the way to a date, Jerry asks George, "You got the tickets?"

6: "Seinfeld" The Alternate Side (TV Episode ) - IMDb

*The Seinfeld Universe: An Unauthorized Fan'S-Eye View of the Entire Domain [Greg Gattuso] on www.enganchecubano.com *FREE* shipping on qualifying offers. Consistently a top 10 show, Seinfeld continues to fascinate its fans.*

7: Seinfeld | WikiSein | FANDOM powered by Wikia

This feature is not available right now. Please try again later.

8: Seinfeld / Headscratchers - TV Tropes

Jerry Seinfeld: Well, what street are you on? Cosmo Kramer: I'm on the corner of first, and first. ait a minute. How can the same street intersect with itself? i must be at the nexus of the universe!

9: Seinfeld Occupations Quiz - By webmaestro

Seinfeld, Mad About You and Friends are three very beloved NBC sitcoms set in New York. But, wait a minute: Were they actually set in the same universe?! Could it be? Yes. And no. We are seriously.

The key sections of the franchise agreement Homeland Security Presidential Directives A case study in syntactic markedness Staffordshire bull terriers Pregnancy day by day book METROCORP BANCSHARES, INC. Advances in Econometrics: Economic Inequality Ethernet over sdh tutorial The howard hughes corp hhc analysis 2018 Susan Hawes. Message from the President of the United States, returning House bill no. 7234, with his obj Sikhs in Latin America Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants, Volume 2 (Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants) The right angel for the right situation. Folk Literature of the Ge Indians (Ucla Latin American Studies) History of the book in Canada From a writers notebook. NASB Update In Touch Ministries Wide Margin Edition; Genuine Leather; Burgundy A monster is born Reel 375. June 13-20, 1891 The birth of the West Nyclopedia of Bible animals V.4. Annals, Books 5-6, 11-12. Synthesis and Properties of Boron Nitride (Materials Science Forum, Vol 54-55) Sky breaking 301 viola grace The Complete Book of Mexican Cooking Tarzan of the Apes and the Prisoner of Zenda Biochemical Med Tryptophan Manual of hypodermatic medication. The American Geisha The psychology of self-management in organizations J. Richard Hackman Breakfast : the real American cuisine Complex Magnetic Phenomena in Rare Earth Intermetallic Compounds NINTH GENERATION 122 Monet at Giverny (Pegasus Library) Plain guide to the Education Act 1997. Princeton astronomy in the 1920s America, welcome to the poorhouse Turbomachines a guide to design selection and theory balje S e smith project gliese Rhythm of the Tides