My teeth Pet Hates: Smoking followed by gossip Favourite Passtime: Playing Cards and Golf Fondest Memory: The first time I met Loretta Lynn. Up ya boy ya! Happiest Day of my Life: Ireland was a poor country at the time, things were being slowly modernized. The only dark cloud in our lives was the sudden death of my father Francie when I was just a wee lad of six, the youngest in the family. My father was born in Acres near Burtonport in County Donegal. My mother, Julia, came from the little Island of Owey, just off the coast, near Kincasslagh where she now lives with my sister Kathleen, her husband John and their children. I was born on 12th December I have two brothers and two sisters. John is the eldest followed by Margaret Margo then Kathleen and James. My first home was a lovely old house across the road from where my mother now lives in Kincasslagh. I used to sleep in a wee room off the kitchen. There were pots hanging from a crook over the open fire in the sitting room. In fact, there was only one house in our area that I recall having a flush toilet when I was growing up. Our toilet was across the road "a tin hut" We moved into a new council house in , a year before my father died. Although I was six years old when my father died from a heart attack at forty-nine, the only memories I seem to have are of him going away and returning home. He worked on farms in Scotland. It was hard, manual labour and a far cry from my own lifestyle today. When he died, my mother lost her partner in life and was left alone to shoulder the responsibility of rearing us. The love and admiration I hold for my mother knows no bounds because she ensured we never wanted for anything. The school was a mile-and-a half from my home, so it was a long walk. We had tillies lamps in the early morning during the winter months to light up the rooms. We had the old inkwells on the desks and it was a frightening affair when we had to progress from writing with pencils to negotiating with ink and nibs. I never disliked school. I suppose I was average as people go, intelligence-wise. School took nothing out of me really. As far as a career was concerned, I was good at maths in secondary school and consequently I thought about the bank as a career. I was interested in teaching, but singing was always a possibility. I had great freedom, a terrific childhood the same as everyone else in our area. I was like a newspaper on feet. And you know, now, I have no time for gossip or for people who spread gossip. From about the age of nine I went to work in the Cope, which is a general store in our area, and I earned a weekly wage of 2 pounds. I got to know everyone around the district through the Cope. A day in the bog was a nightmare to me as I never got to grips with the skills required. It meant a team effort, and I have to work at my own pace. I worked in the Cope every summer till I was fourteen years old and I saved my weekly wage for my holidays at the end of August. Christmas, for me, centred around the church as I always sang in the choir, even as a child. I always feel a real closeness to people in church and Christmas Eve in the chapel was something special. Religious occasions like First Communion and Confirmation were among the highlights of our childhood years. They were special occasions, not just in the religious sense but also as events to be celebrated. When I received my First Communion, there was no family outing to a posh restaurant. We went home after church and had the normal family meal. There was no place to go! I used to spend my summers with my granny on the little island of Owey which is now uninhabited. The island was lovely. The views were just fantastic. You could sit for hours just marveling at the world around you. The acting that used to go on in those houses was something else! Granny eventually came to live with us in Kincasslagh until she died in My Teenage Years My interest in music and fashion really started to develop

when I became a teenager. There were dances at the village hall and I was allowed out to them, but all the old ones would be at them too. I had girlfriends, but we were fierce innocent, not like the kids nowadays. The Ceili traditional dancing was a very popular form of entertainment in our area when I was growing up. It was a great opportunity to slip in beside someone you fancied. I was very unhappy at college and I longed for home. I used to hitch home every weekend or take the bus. The summer before I started college, I had a great time when I went down to Dublin to work. We used to go to dances every night and the Irish Club on Sunday afternoons. It was a marvelous time. I was eighteen-and-a-half and I really was as happy as Larry. So the fact of being away from home was not really the problem in Galway. I was doing a business studies course in college and I had planned to go on to university and maybe take up teaching. Before the first Christmas in college, I met my sister Margaret in the local hotel and I told her that I was unhappy and that I wanted to leave college and become a singer. Margaret had already established a very successful singing career. She was known the length and breadth of Ireland as Margo, she was a household name. Margaret started singing when I was only 1 year old. Everybody in Ireland knew who she was. Back then, she was as well known as Cliff Richard is in the U. She had the same level of success in Ireland then that I would have now. It was through Margaret that I developed my interest in the music of the showbands. So, when I decided to leave college, Margaret agreed that I could join her band. I got very little encouragement when I started out because people thought that my music was from a bygone era and had no relevance or place in the world today. I felt they were wrong and I was right because I have succeeded in doing what I wanted to do. One of the members of the band tried to teach me but there was no point. All I wanted to do was sing. I was allowed to sing out front sometimes and I loved the applause. It was like a drug and I was getting hooked. There comes a time when you have to take a gamble to achieve whatever it is you want and gamble I did. I told Margaret that I was planning to leave and become a singer in my own right. I decided to make my own record in and I had nothing at the time.

Children two daughters and three sons: Chris did not attend his high school prom because he was participating in a crew meet. Wife Caroline Fentress is an elementary school teacher. Originally cast in The Prince of Tides , but Barbra Streisand decided she wanted her real son to play the role. She wanted to personally apologize to Chris, so she called his dorm room. One of his roommates answered the phone and took the message, which bewildered him because Chris had not yet mentioned that he was "in the movie biz". Began modeling after his sister Sally talked to a talent agent into seeing him. Kids in the key demographic were polled as to which of the two would win in a fight. The second time he played the role, he acted opposite Uma Thurman , whose ex-husband Gary Oldman went on to play Commissioner Gordon. Announced he was expecting a fifth child with his wife, Caroline Fentress. Worked with acting coach Peter Kelley. He has played the same character G. Callen on three different series: Los Angeles and Hawaii Five-0 His father was of mostly Irish, with a small amount of Scottish and English, ancestry. Is the youngest of seven children, with four sisters and two brothers. Attended and graduated from Loyola Academy in Willmette, Illinois Attended and graduated from Boston College with his B. He was first offered the role of Agent J in Men in Black , but he turned it down, so the role was given to Will Smith. Personal Quotes 13 [on the Batman films]: The way people see me in movies, in the stuff they read about me, is kind of an idealistic view. I did date her. It was weird because it was the first time I had ever really dated an actress. When I was in college, I never had a serious girlfriend because it was too much fun dating different girls. It was nothing serious, to tell you the truth. They almost pulled me in. But I have a much better time going to the bars over at UCLA, drinking beers and listening to that whole scene. But you really have to take your time and make smart decisions. After Batman Forever , I started getting offered these huge commercial films that you know are going to make hundreds of millions of dollars worldwide. And you can jump on that train if you want and cash in, make a ton of money, get a couple of sequels and some merchandising. But in two years, I think people would be just so sick of your face, that would be it. Everything about him, his voice, even on its lowest register, still radiates. Every scene, he wants 10 do 40 different ways. How does he come up with so many ideas? Marty Brest and I kept looking at each other, like two little kids high-fiving. I was a late bloomer. Of course I got the parts because the other kids were so immature and the directors liked me. When I spend too much time here, things get out of whack. Too many people here are too concerned about what car they drive, what they look like, where they go, who they hang out with, the whole scene. And when it comes right down to it, the scene here is not that fun. My real friends are there. This woman thought I was totally serious, and I was being completely sarcastic. It was wild, hanging with those guys. Charlie Sheen buys antique watches like I buy tennis shoes.
