After 14 days of racing the grey hull coasted around the bottom of the Island this morning to be the 6th boat to finish the race off of Morne Rouge Beach on the lea side of the Island. This finish puts the team in second place in IRC Zero division, for the amateur crew who have never sailed together this was the event of a lifetime, a real bucket list item for most sailors and these brave men and women completed the course. Derek and the team will be at the Toronto and Vancouver Boat Shows in January to once again update visitors on the next round the world race as well as how the team training events available during the winter Caribbean season and spring time on the Atlantic. Spinnakers at the Ready: After a competitive start the fleet have been battling through the first night to negotiate the fastest passage through the Canary Islands and into the open waters of the Atlantic Ocean. The entire fleet chose the northerly route through the channel between Lanzarote and Fuerteventura and once again north of Tenerife. The northerly route puts the fleet nearer the fresh breeze coming from the north rather than south where an area of little wind has developed. The rhumb line goes straight through Tenerife but the highest point, Mount Teide, has an elevation of 3, m 12,ft , which would give a significant wind shadow to any yachts that ventured south. The crew have settled in after a challenging first day at sea. It will be interesting to see the tactics employed by Lupa of London at La Palma. Most of the team hail from Greece and have sailed with each other for years and this understanding was exemplified at the start, when a spinnaker peel was pulled off with precision, to gain a big advantage. During the first night, the wind speed and direction has been in a constant state of flux and Team Yacana may well have gained the lead through good sail changing decisions and slick crew work. Last night, Yacana sent this message from on board: Spirits are good, thank God no rain! We are leaving the Island of Tenerife eight miles on our port and plan to be in the open ocean in about 16 hours, then heading to Grenada. Apollo 7, mainly crewed by friends from Plymouth, took a slender lead after passing the southern tip of Lanzarote and unfurled their Code Zero to open up a three mile lead on their rivals by dawn. The twin keel design is the smallest and lightest yacht in the race and, with just three crew on board, is more suited to the downwind conditions that should feature in the race over the coming days. Nigel Passmore reports from the course on Apollo 7: Rain, waves and wind shifts. Still heading in the right direction with a good breeze. Crew are happy and settling in. Very much waterline length at the moment. Getting into the open waters of the Atlantic first pays high dividend as more wind is expected for the leaders. Just a few hours difference can turn into enough miles for leading yachts to disappear over the horizon. All of the fleet should pass La Palma into the Atlantic today, raising spinnakers which should be flying for the foreseeable future. After days of confused weather systems, the Trade Winds are forecast to re-establish over the coming days.

Five great examples of the spirit of Canada on its 150th anniversary Inspired by Chicken Soup for the Soul: The Spirit of Canada by Amy Newmark and Janet Matthews. Everyone loves Canada, and Chicken Soup for the Soul decided to celebrate Canada's 150th anniversary with a special book about what makes Canada unique.

Anthologies are one of the original, interactive, non-linear technologies. For these real world readers the success of an anthology depends, therefore, less on the elegance of its concept and arrangement than on the simple quality of its selections. Barbara Hehner performs the anthology juggling act very successfully in The Spirit of Canada, a history of our country as reflected in stories, poems, and songs. With selections old and new, familiar and obscure, regionally and culturally diverse, and lighthearted and serious, Hehner keeps an impressive number of balls in the air. Giving each section its own identity and unity are the illustrations. The choices here are inspired. The variety of media – pastels, pen and ink, watercolour, pencil – and the lively book design, incorporating full-page illustrations, vignettes, and decorations, pull us from chapter to chapter. The concept, arrangement, design, luxurious look, and wide age-range appeal make this a bookstore shoe-in for the gift season. But what of the actual reader? What about the dippers and skippers? I predict for them a long and happy relationship as the book hangs around the house, on the coffee table or bedside or in the bathroom. The Spirit of Canada contains such good stuff. Anthology editors often have their lovely plans scuttled by difficulties of copyright permissions, resulting in lopsided books. If Hehner had to compromise, she covered her tracks well. Her choices are also highly original. As I chose my own adventure through this collection I went back to childhood favourites like the Paul Bunyan stories. Hehner has also appended detailed notes to each selection, and only here did I find myself out of sympathy for the collection. Of course, as a real life reader I would simply skip those bits and settle right into the pieces themselves, a selection that in its variety, quality of writing, beauty of illustration, and essential good-heartedness made me feel oh dare I say this? It is so unCanadian. Will I sound like some flag-waving fanatic?

Five great examples of the spirit of Canada on its 100th anniversary Inspired by Chicken Soup for the Soul: Canadians are known for their patriotism, their warmth and hospitality, and their miles of natural wonderland. The contributors to Chicken Soup for the Soul: The Spirit of Canada share stories about their own love and gratitude for their nation. Here are five examples of how the spirit of Canada manifests for our writers: Canadians welcome immigrants with warmth and appreciation. Shortly before she planned on fleeing war-torn Syria in a raft, Rahaf Bi reconnected with her cousin living in Canada. Her cousin promised to help Rahaf immigrate to Canada, which was accepting Syrian refugees. Rahaf felt at home instantly. Canoeing one day, Sharon Lawrence and her field biologist husband found an injured chipmunk struggling to swim. The couple brought the chipmunk – dubbed Shipwreck – home and she quickly recovered. That night, they put out food stations around the house and released her. The next morning, though, Sharon saw Shipwreck waiting by the door for food. And the two women chatted nicely during the game. Now married to Dave for nearly forty years, Julia has become great friends with Mary Lou. Her neighbor, a First Nations woman named Lily, immediately came to their aid. Lily grabbed the toddler, ran into the lake with him, and smeared the clay-like sand on his stomach. Then she instructed Mary Lee and her husband to drive him to the nearest hospital. Back at camp later that night, the whole family sat by the fire. In the spring of 1981, Jacqueline Pearce was in high school as Terry Fox started his Marathon of Hope across Canada to raise awareness and funding for cancer research.
