Early history[edit] The earliest evidence of human occupation in Hertfordshire come from a gravel pit in Rickmansworth. The finds of flint tools date back , years, [2] long before Britain became an island. People have probably lived in the land now called Hertfordshire for about 12, years, since the Mesolithic period [3] in Ware making Ware one of the oldest continuously occupied sites in Europe. The Romans besieged him at Wheathampstead, and partly because of the defection of the Trinovantes whose King Cassivellaunus had had murdered , the Catuvellauni were forced to surrender. Cunobelinus became king of the Catuvellauni in 9 or 10 CE and ruled for about thirty years, [17] conquering such a large area of Britain that the Roman writer Suetonius called him Britannorum Rex in Latin "King of Britain". When the Romans took over, their settlement, laid out in 49 CE, [21] became known as Verulamium. The ancient trackway, the Icknield Way also runs through Hertfordshire. These are three of the "four highways" of medieval England the other being the Fosse Way , which does not run through Hertfordshire which were still the main routes through the country more than a thousand years later. Later, Ermine Street would be built directly on top of it. The Synod also marked the end of the conflict between the Celtic Church and the Romanised church introduced by Saint Augustine. At that time, in the war between Saxon and Norseman , Hertfordshire was on the front line. When, after the Saxon victory in the Battle of Ethandun in , the Saxon King Alfred the Great and Norse King Guthrum the Old agreed to partition England between them, the dividing line between their territories split what was to become Hertfordshire almost through the middle, along the line of the River Lea [27] and then along Watling Street. It seems the land now comprising Hertfordshire was then partly in the Kingdom of Essex nominally under Norse control, though still populated by Saxons and partly in the Kingdom of Mercia which remained Saxon. Their sites have not been found, and probably lie beneath the streets of Hertford itself. Anglo-Saxon Hertford is an example of town planning as demonstrated by its organised rectangular grid street pattern. He invaded England next year in retaliation. Forkbeard was crowned King of England on Christmas Day, but only reigned for five weeks before dying. Like most counties in the south-east, [54] most of Hertfordshire was in private i. He bore one of the first two sets of heraldic arms in England: Richard became one of the twenty-five Barons sworn to enforce the Magna Carta , for which he was excommunicated in King Henry II celebrated Christmas there in It contained significant provisions still in force to this day, including the principle of habeas corpus which was first invoked in court in The River Lea at Amwell In the High Middle Ages, the county was relatively urbanised by medieval standards, but because towns follow roads and Hertfordshire had many small roads rather than a few large ones, there was no large conurbation. The county traded in butter and cheese, and to a lesser extent meat, hides and leather. Much of this produce was bound for London. King John granted the Knights a fair and market at Baldock in , to be held annually. He was baptised in Abbots Langley. He died in This was actually a series of separate wars that lasted a total of years, between and King John II of France was imprisoned there in [84] in considerable luxury. Near Tring , a cluster of deserted medieval villages can still be seen. This is not the same man as the Abbott of St Albans. He gave the alm of a groat to the poor. He gave his best gown to the prior, but the gift seems to have been regretted and the treasurer later bought it back for fifty marks. Neville the Kingmaker advanced on London. After confusion in the early morning mist, in which the Yorkists seem to have ended up fighting each other, the Lancastrians won the battle. Some of the foundation stones are even older, allegedly going back to the 8th century. First English paper and printing industry One of the first three printing presses in England was in St Albans. In , Queen Mary granted the town of Hertford its first charter for a fee of thirteen shillings and fourpence, due annually at Michaelmas. When plague ravaged London, she held parliaments at Hertford Castle [] in and He built Theobalds Park , enclosing a large tract of southern Hertfordshire in a wall. In , the parliamentary army, still unpaid after their victory in the First English Civil War , camped on Thriploe Heath near Royston. They wrote to Parliament demanding their pay. Unfortunately for the plotters, the Royal party was early, so the opportunity was missed; when the plot was discovered, it became a pretext for a purge of the Whig leaders. Around the end of the 18th century, its population was around 95, The next year, smallpox hit Hitchin, killing people. Its highest point is the Tring Summit in Hertfordshire, which was formed in He said "Herts is justly deemed the first and best corn county in the kingdom", [] an assessment that may not be free from local bias. Thanks to a rapidly increasing population and improved record-keeping practices, the volume of paper records for Hertfordshire in the 19th and 20th centuries is huge. Many of these documents are written or printed on paper made locally, at a time when paper-making joined brewing as another dominant industry in the county. Dickinson made paper for the stamps, and also for the Mulready envelopes. It was founded by a fertiliser inventor in Ten corps of Volunteer Infantry were formed in The house is still standing, and has been adapted into a museum. It had a station in Hertfordshire, at Marston Gate. The London Underground rail line reached Rickmansworth in It also fought in the advance to Ghissignies. Mustang Is of No. Nineteen companies formed at once. De Havilland designed their Mosquito in Hatfield [Notes 11] and constructed them at Leavesden , together with Halifax bombers. The Henry Moore Foundation still operates from the village.

The PCCs, as they will be known, will be tasked with scrutinising their force and holding it to account. The commissioners will be paid and are supposed to empower local people into having a say on how crime is tackled in their area. Nominations for candidates in Hertfordshire have now officially closed. BBC News has taken a look at each of the police forces ahead of the elections. Hertfordshire Hertfordshire Police covers an area of square miles 1, sq km with a mix of villages and towns, with some of the busiest roads in Europe and a population of more than 1m people. The force is made up of 3, officers and staff, and more than special constables. The force is working with neighbouring constabularies Bedfordshire and Cambridgeshire to help save costs. A joint working group with the Bedfordshire and Cambridgeshire forces had questioned whether the company could deliver the service after the company failed to provide enough security guards for the Olympics. After a review, the forces said they would continue to develop a business case which would see G4S supply the services including IT and human resources. This includes continuing to forge collaborations with other police areas and a continued emphasis on low crime levels, particularly burglary. In June, the forces were given the go-ahead to investigate outsourcing "backroom" services including IT, finance, human resources and legal services. But the plan was put on hold after G4S admitted found itself criticised for falling short on the number of security guards provided for the Olympics. The police force says its committed to "maintaining strong performance in reducing crime and disorder". It aims to ensure total crime levels per head of population do not increase and that there is no increase in the levels of anti-social behaviour or burglaries. It says the county should be a "hostile environment for criminals". The force also wants to increase of the number of offenders charged with the supply of Class A drugs. In Hertfordshire Police decided to close front counter services at four police stations as part of its savings. To make the savings the force is looking at cutting up to officer posts seeing number reduced from from 1, in to between 1, and 1, by March Up to staff posts are also set to go by March going from 1, in to between 1, and 1, The number of violent offences decreased by 9. The number of robberies dropped by Specials come from all walks of life and volunteer their spare time for a minimum of 16 hours a month. They have the same powers as regular police officers and wear the same uniform. They are highly trained and play an essential role in preventing, reducing and tackling crime and keeping the communities of Hertfordshire safe. Our Specials say they joined for many different reasons, including supporting the communities they live in and having the chance to enjoy numerous, varied benefits. Which skills are required to become a Special? We need people with strong communication skills who act with confidence, coupled with a responsible attitude. We are looking for people who: Stay calm in a crisis Able to respond effectively in confrontational situations Communicate clearly Resolve disputes sensitively and appropriately Think laterally and solve problems Plan and take the initiative Are tolerant and work well in a team Are honest, fair and impartial Act with integrity Treat people with respect and courtesy Are resilient We are committed to creating a Special Constabulary which reflects the community it serves and encourage people from all communities and backgrounds to apply. The satisfaction of supporting and policing your community. The opportunity to learn new transferable skills and gain valuable experience. The opportunity to work in a professional environment, supported by up-to-date training and knowledge. A chance to challenge yourself and show what you are capable of. A chance to gain a real competitive edge, meaning you are well placed in the employment market. An opportunity to learn about the police before committing to a job within the service. Will it change you? You can grow in self-confidence and may discover personal strengths not previously recognised. You can improve your communication and problem solving skills. You will learn a great deal about your community. You can develop new contacts and associations. Developing as a Special Once you have been trained and have practical experience you will be able to take on more responsibility as a Special. Training is available on an on-going basis and therefore, should you want to be promoted up the ranks, this is achievable as your experience and skills develop. This means that you will constantly be faced with new challenges and the opportunity to acquire new skills. As a Special Constable you can make a direct contribution to your local community. You will help fight crime and forge stronger connections between the police and the people they serve. Find out what you are capable of The truth is that we are all capable of far more than we know and becoming a special is one of the best ways to learn new transferable skills and develop untapped potential. You will face exciting challenges, acquire valuable skills that will assist in your personal and career development, and you can take pride in your achievements and bolster your self-respect and confidence. See a different world Out on patrol, you will deal with situations and people you would probably never encounter in your day-to-day life. Being a special is both exciting and rewarding and for many it is a life-changing decision. Whatever your plans, you will find working as a member of the wider police service, alongside regular officers of all ranks, police staff and other volunteers, an exciting and rewarding experience. Make the streets safer Specials are rightly proud of the amazing work they do. Going out onto the streets to tackle crime and anti-social behaviour helps increase public safety and maintain community confidence. It makes neighbourhoods better places to live, it helps young people make positive choices in their lives and it helps specials become more confident and respected members of their communities.
