Everybody knows a bright child who works hard and is considered a high achiever in school. These children have enormous learning potential, but they stand out from their peers in three key areas; they learn faster, earlier and differently. In addition there is a growing population of children in Ireland with dual exceptionality, i. Does an exceptionally bright child mean an exceptionally bright future? Parenting in itself can be daunting but parenting a "gifted" child can be incredibly challenging. Unlike many other countries there are scant resources available in Ireland for exceptionally able kids; yet, there are estimated to be over 27, children who fit the profile of "giftedness" in this country. This website has been developed by a voluntary group of Irish parents of exceptionally able children. It is our aim to help other parents and teachers to find the information, support and advice that they may need. Exceptionally able and twice exceptional children can come from all socio-economic groups and from all parts of the country. Trying to determine whether your child is gifted can be difficult; especially if it is your first child, as you have nothing really to measure against. You may feel that your child is just simply a clever kid. Their future is bright with no trouble sitting exams; they sail through both primary and secondary school and are assured a place at a top university doing the course of their choice! School is a veritable mindfield for gifted kids and their parents. These children often struggle to fit in with both teachers and other pupils. Getting Your Child Assessed Why should you get your child assessed? In their view supplementary teaching should be tried prior to any intervention. Sounds like good advice but the reality is that there is a lot of pressure on the average primary school teacher, especially with large, overcrowded classes of pupils with varying abilities and languages. The purpose of this series is to raise awareness of issues affecting exceptionally able and twice exceptional children amongst teachers, parents and the general public. We have also run a highly successful 3D immersive technology pilot project based in Carlow Gaelscoil.. The success of this pilot has led to the formation of MissionV Education Limited , a not for profit organisation specialising in the use of game based learning and virtual worlds technology for the support of primary and post-primary students; particularly those who are at risk of significantly underachieving and those with high potential. We also support Irish Centre for Talented Youth initiatives and projects and provide speakers on gifted issues on request. News Headlines The World Council for Gifted and Talented Children invite you to take part in the 20th anniversary conference- celebrating giftedness and creativity- which will be taking place in Louisville, Kentucky, USA this year from Aug. Check out the parents and teachers blog launched by Giftedkids. This is not an expert site, it is run on a voluntary basis and as such is based on opinion and experience but we hope that it acts as a signpost for educational resources and other support services for Irish families with exceptionally able children. By using this website you accept that any dependence by you on such information, opinion or advice is at your own risk.
