

1: The Testing by Joelle Charbonneau - BookBub

the testing by joelle charbonneau on bookbub. do you possess a winning combination of theoretical knowledge, practical skills and raw intelligence? do you have what it takes to lead others?

And not just any type of dystopian YA trilogy. I see how jacket artist Sammy Yuen used elements from the story to create the cover, but seriously, anyone else take a look at this and get a sense of déjà vu? Then you get the story: School Edition, and I think that sums it up pretty well. That being said, I actually really enjoyed this book. Charbonneau writes well, and I found myself almost unable to put it down. And while later stages of the Testing process test the application of this knowledge, the initial stages of competition literally have the teenagers filling out test booklets with essay answers. My eyes are sore and my body numb with fatigue when I finish and realize the clock is still ticking. Ten minutes remain in the testing period. Did I answer the questions too fast? Did my hurrying cause me to give incorrect or incomplete answers? My fingers itch to open the cover so I can fix the mistakes I must have made. Almost always my first instinct will be the correct one. How often have I gone through this exact scene myself? Charbonneau has brought the YA dystopia home. On the other hand, I remember well the intense pressure not just to do well in school, but to be one of the best. I recently read an article about a Chinese man who literally worked himself to death. I also remember hearing horrific stories when I was younger of Japanese students about my age who would literally kill themselves over failing marks. Just enough to make someone too sick to sit for a test. Can I believe as well in the possibility of a government, of institutions in power, actually prizing that degree of killer instinct? Take a look at what politicians are willing to do to win. In the Philippines where I grew up, that means bribery, cheating, sometimes even murder. So yes, I can believe it. For example, a mistake with an intellectual puzzle results in a student being impaled in the eye – the student lies on the ground bleeding out while others are forced to stay in their seats until they finish their own puzzles, lest they accidentally view the answers of the other students. Because it is a good book, with a much overdue spotlight on intellectual rather than physical battles.
