Thanks for visiting our new website! We're the owners, Mike and Kristina Lyden. We live and operate our shop in Ashland, VA, just 10 minutes north of Richmond.

Just then, the lights in the city go out, and the trio is confronted by a spiked muscle car with red headlamps. At a critical moment in the chase, Ratchet experiences a flashback to his days in the Great War. PTSD-bait in the making. Field tech Ratchet is in the middle of a war zone with a Decepticon barrage falling down around him. Communicating with Supreme Commander Ultra Magnus, he says he found the object of his mission, an Autobot intelligence officer named Arcee. She is badly damaged and in need of immediate repair. Ratchet flashes back into the present and is nearly run over by the muscle car, but is pushed out of the way by Bumblebee. Meanwhile, the TV news is broadcasting a live, high-speed chase between the police and the strange car, and Ratchet experiences another flashback. In the middle of the repair to Arcee, Ratchet loads her up and starts to evacuate the area, only to be caught and smacked down by a bounty hunter. Ratchet finally recognizes the muscle car as an old nemesis, Lockdown. The past haunts him again. Ratchet and Arcee are now prisoners of Lockdown, who explains his work as a bounty hunter and his lack of allegiance to either side in the war. He also says he has a fondness for taking weapons and parts from his quarry as trophies and upgrades. Flash-forward to the present, where Prime finally forces Lockdown to stop. The bounty hunter incapacitates Prime with the EMP weapon, and they both disappear. In his hideout, Lockdown explains to a tied-up Optimus Prime about the bounty on his head for killing Megatron. Before they roll out, Ratchet refuses to join the rescue mission, though without explanation. Everybody was kung-fu fighting! Those cats were fast as lightning. Lockdown requests payment, but Blitzwing wants results first. If those satisfy him, then the upgrade reward will satisfy Lockdown. Lockdown dispatches Bulkhead and Bumblebee without much trouble. Prowl is a bit harder for Lockdown to handle until the bounty hunter drops him with an EMP blast. Before he can take any more trophies, Ratchet arrives and confronts Lockdown. He remarks that he would have used his EMP generator to remove them painlessly, but he no longer has it. Lockdown offers to return the generator if Ratchet will use it. The act brings on another flashback. In order to avoid interrogation from Megatron, Arcee asks Ratchet to use his EMP generator on her to wipe her memory core, which contains critical access codes for the Autobots. When Ratchet and Lockdown struggle for the device, it overloads and goes off. She can't take the pressure! In the present, Ratchet mockingly asks Lockdown if he wants the generator to ease his pain, while Lockdown tightens his grip on a rod. As Ratchet moves to take the EMP generator back, Lockdown prepares to strike, but Ratchet hits Lockdown with a magnetic blast before he can do so. He then escapes with Optimus as the ship crashes into a river.

Thrill of the Hunt, the authority and trendsetter in scavenger hunts, takes this traditional game to the next level of fun and interaction with the use of technology and social media. Thrill of the Hunt develops and administers to unique custom scavenger hunts, turning any event into an adventure.

What is This Blog About? I am hoping we can share our adventures and ideas because, as Forrest has pointed out, the thrill is in the chase not in the capture. Click below to listen to a short audio bio of Forrest Fenn <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=...> In a nutshell, Forrest Fenn lives in Santa Fe, New Mexico where he started an art gallery, raised a family, collects artifacts, writes books and made a fortune. For instance, an ancient Aztec golden amulet is worth much more than the current value of its weight in gold because it is unique, unusual, sought after, special, etc. Maybeâ€¦Forrest is not a traditional thinker tied to conventional ways of getting things done. If he were, his life would be dull, commonplace, mundane, boring. Instead, his life has been anything but humdrum. He has made his fortune and his reputation by thinking, creating and trading well beyond the bell curve. In my humble opinion he looks forward to capable individuals out there trying to out-think him and locate his treasure. Its a contest for him. Forrest versus the rest of the world and the winner gets to keep a million dollars. To meet Forrest is to stand in the presence of a very smart, competent and competitive fellow. Someone will most certainly find his treasure chestâ€¦why not you? Who can go after his treasure? Where do I start looking? There are three or possibly four essential items that will help you find where the treasure chest is hidden. He has published the poem on his website and it has appeared in a number of news stories about the hidden treasure. You can find his poem at the bottom of this page. Forrest also wrote a memoir, The Thrill of the Chase, which is a beautiful hard cover book with plenty of pictures and lots of possible additional hints to where the treasure chest is hidden. There are also additional hints and clues Forrest has handed out since the hunt began back in 1974. Finally, we have been able to get additional information via email exchanges between Forrest and many who have been searching and taken the time to write him. I hope this blog will become a source of information about the treasure and where you can begin your search. There are plenty of speculators, naysayers and misinformed individuals out there including reporters and journalists who have added inaccuracy and conjecture to the trove of hints and clues floating around out in the ether. As the story is passed from person to person it begins to grow and be embellished and before you know it the facts are hard to find. In truth, what Forrest has said over and over is that only the poem and what he has written in the book contain honest hints and clues that will lead to the treasureâ€¦ignore the words that others have put in his mouth. I learned this the hard way. Forrest himself is a master of the double entendre. He chooses his words very deliberately. More than once I have run off suffering from the belief that I had brilliant new information about where the gold is hiddenâ€¦ In fact, I did not pay close enough attention to the precision of his words. He specializes in letting you believe something he never said. I told you he is clever. Another place to look for clues. He occasionally writes about the hidden treasure and in his writings you might just find the puzzle piece you were looking for that will lead you to the treasure. Anyone interested in the treasure should read his website from front to back. Not only will it give you a pretty good picture of just who Forrest is and why he is legend but his real-life stories are entertaining and witty. I am planning more until I find it or until you find it. Other times I feel less confident but excited because I am going somewhere new surrounded by mountains with the possibility that I might be right. On the other hand, every time I have come back empty handed, but not empty spirited. I have absolutely wonderful treks that are crammed with little adventures. I have walked marvelous American landscapes. I have slept on the high desert mesa and in river canyons under juniper and pinyon. I have hiked incredible stretches of crystal clear trout streams guarded by tall pine and spruce. I have ambled across alpine parks delicious with spring wildflowers and soaked in natural hot springs to sooth my tired feet. I have been within a few dozen yards of antelope, big horn sheep, elk, mule deer and bear. I have visited pueblos, plazas, canyons, hilltops and forests. I have driven thousands of dusty miles through ochre stained, haltingly beautiful, volcanic topography. I have smelled the desert sage and tasted frito pie. I have been in some of the loveliest country a person can picture. Its been a wonderful experience and I am grateful that Forrest tempted meâ€¦dared meâ€¦ to go out and find his treasureâ€¦The Thrill of the Chase. Now you need to get looking tooâ€¦. Begin it where warm waters halt And take it in the canyon down, Not far, but too far to walk. Put in below the home of Brown. So why is it that I must go And leave my trove for all to seek? So hear me all and listen good, Your effort will be worth the cold. If you are brave and in the wood I give you title to the gold.

We report on vital issues from politics to education, as well as being the indispensable authority on the Texas scene, covering everything from music to cultural events with insightful.

You are now engaging in an ancient and rich practice. You are a custodian of the earth and part of the natural landscape. Scout your locations beforehand and look for signs of different animals. You can set up trail cameras and monitor the area. Always prepare for the worst. Make sure that you are properly stocked with food, water and have a first aid kit. Double check your weapons and bring any other necessary survival gear you see fit. Becoming an excellent marksman takes time and a lot of trial and error. Focusing on your initial skill set and mastering that is your first task. You can hone this skill while hunting and practicing at the range. A great beginner set up usually costs a few hundred more dollars. Keep in mind that over the years, wear and tear is going to add up for some additional maintenance costs. Rifles are usually for hunting ranges between 50 to 100 yards, while bows and shotguns are usually between 10 to 50 yards. Shotguns are great for animals that are on the move for the kill, while rifles and bows, which are single projectile weapons are best used for taking down a stationary animal. A return to the roots of early man has risen. An Energetic Connection To Your Nutrition You can expect many knee-jerk reactions when talking about hunting your own food. This is a personal decision for you take back control in one aspect of your life, if you so choose to do so. There is an intangible force shared between you and the game that you hunt. This is the closest you can get to being spiritually connected to the food that you consume. Those opposed to this lifestyle need to ask themselves if this is truly some sort of ethical quandary or just unchecked hypocrisy. He had this to say about his detractors: I only hunt things I eat and my goal is to personally, ethically harvest all the meat I eat at homeâ€”I know that some people have a problem with that, but if you wear leather and eat meat, hating hunters for getting their own food is insanely hypocritical and just another sign of the convenient detachment people have regarding the food they consume. Make no mistake about it; if you eat meat you are killing as wellâ€”Life eats life. My goal with pursuing hunting is to get more connected with that. And if that does bother you, maybe consider becoming a vegetarian or a vegan. Enjoying the Meats of Your Labor The transference of energy from your hunting efforts to the kill down to the preparation and eating of your food is an enormous chain of effort. One that will be rewarded once you finally sit down and taste your prize. Compared to the life of a factory farmed animal, killing a wild animal is conversely more humane. Hunters that eat their kills have ended their hunt with a swift blow. Rather than putting their animals through years of abuse and torture. Hunters contribute to an eco friendly lifestyle by being self-reliant and cleaning up after themselves. Fresh venison or an elk steak has to be tasted to be believed. Wild game, when prepared is an absolute delight. This is one of the reasons cage free animals have picked up in popularity. The meat simply tastes better. The quality is unmatched and will make for a fantastic meal. New hunters and veterans alike, get out there and enjoy the hunt. Your next meal is waiting for you.

Thrill of the hunt unknown The idea that once something has been achieved or captured, one loses interest in it. Chasing after it was more satisfying than actually having it.

Today I have just a few vintage finds to share. I snagged them up immediately upon spying the bunch at Goodwill. The bunny is the epitome of all things spring and, of course, Easter, which is right around the corner. And no farm would be complete without a duck. Or the all-famous rooster. I am so torn between keeping them and placing them in my Etsy shop. You can find my email address on my "Contact" page. The link to it is at the top of this blog page. But there was just something about the toile pastoral scene and the gilding that caught my attention. When I was growing up my father was a smoker he eventually quit , but we never had any ashtrays as fancy as this one! These are a new addition to my salt and pepper shaker collection. It never ceases to amaze me as to how many different varieties of shakers are out there. I mean, who comes up with the idea for scarecrow salt and pepper shakers? A bit creepy, some might say. Unfortunately this is what the bottoms look like. At least I can see 1 they were never used 2 who the distributor was 3 that they were made in China and 4 they have plastic stoppers. The Thrill of the Hunt: Hunting Basics Guide. Hunting, distilled down to its simplest form involves the pursuit and killing of wild animals. Modern day hunters employ the use of firearms along with bows and arrows.

Simply, Thrill of the Hunt is a company that exclusively develops and administers to themed scavenger hunts for any occasion or celebration. Thrill of the Hunt is educational, interactive, and perfect for all ages! Originally started by two very sassy gals, Thrill of the Hunt was the brain child of sisters, Nicole and Heather Piper. Currently owned by Heather Piper, Thrill of the Hunt continues to be headquartered at its humble beginnings of Latrobe, Pennsylvania. Our scavenger hunts can be found nationally and inquires reach out to us internationally. Why a scavenger hunt company? The Piper sisters had a vision to take scavenger hunts to another level of adventure and excitement, and offer that experience to the masses. Thrill of the Hunt wanted to get people off their backsides, thinking strategically and socializing, while exploring their local communities, neighborhoods and cities. How did Thrill of the Hunt come into fruition? Originally, Heather thought of developing a themed scavenger hunt and approached her sister who loved the idea. Nicole went a step further and suggested they create a company that solely focused on theme scavenger hunts with a modern perspective. The idea of giving scavenger hunts this new dimension of incorporating technology, online tools and social media, and making the experience even more challenging and interactive was created. Together, the sisters established Thrill of the Hunt. While the company offers custom scavenger hunts for company outings, trade shows, corporate events and team building functions, Thrill of the Hunt also offers public scavenger hunts in select areas. The future of Thrill of the Hunt. Thrill of the Hunt is working towards building themed scavenger hunts based on books, movies, pop culture, major events, musical artists and so on and so forth. Eventually, Thrill of the Hunt will turn these ideas into true theatrical scavenger hunt experiences, offered in all major cities. Stay tuned more to come! Thrill of the Hunt wants to promote quaint communities, historic neighborhoods and support revived areas through partnerships with companies of all sizes. Thrill of the Hunt wants to give back. As the popularity of our scavenger hunts grow, Thrill of the Hunt will continue to donate a portion of our proceeds for each hosted scavenger hunt event to a local charity or organization, specific to the scavenger hunt theme. Local charities and nonprofit organizations have the option of teaming up with Thrill of the Hunt to raise awareness for specific causes related to the scavenger hunt theme. You can take your love of scavenger hunts in one of two directions, purchase your very own custom scavenger hunt and host your own event, or participate in a Thrill of the Hunt hosted scavenger hunt event. Went in there for the 1st time today and loved it! I bought a fabulous mirror! Great customer service. My 3 yo daughter was enjoying the place and the lady who works there was very nice to her.

In addition to their charming downtown, take to the backroads for even more unique shopping experiences! Whether you are outfitting your lake house, or looking for that special souvenir keepsake, our local shops have some delightful choices. The Schroon Lake Association has been working since to responsibly manage the lake. The craft fair is one of their fund raisers. Yes, there will be Kettle Corn. In case you were wondering. In Newcomb, there is a craft fair as part of Newcomb Day, with all kinds of fun activities. The fair is set up in their beautiful Overlook Park, with a view of the mountains, on the first Sunday of August. Soak up the welcoming hometown atmosphere and the scents from the catering trucks. I also like the quilt raffles. The ones displayed are works of art. Many delightful crafts, goodies, and like-minded people are abundant on these festive days. Check our events calendar to time your visit just right. By attending craft fairs, you also get to meet the artists and crafters. If that idea appeals to you, we have even more places to go. Look for the signs to direct you to the makers of homemade soaps, candles, and lip balms. They smell incredibly good. It is difficult to choose just one. That is not all the treasure to be found there. If you want to wash your hands in the highest style, this is the place to go. The gift shop at Natural Stone Bridge and Caves is a personal favorite. Anything mineral is likely to be found there. But take some of the different tours of the caves, first. Then visit the gift shop as a triumphant close to the outing. They also have an ice cream shop. But you would notice that. This amazing system of caves also has some wonderful hiking paths on the property. It is a wonderful day trip that is only minutes away from Schroon Lake. If you would like to take a scenic drive to the other side of Schroon Lake, you can explore all the interesting items at the Adirondack General Store. This old-fashioned shop offers up knickknacks, candles, Adirondack-themed decorations, and a full deli. It is a great place to have breakfast or lunch, either packed in a sack for you, or served at one of their tables in the cheerful dining room. Another recommended scenic drive is taking Blue Ridge Road to a real buffalo farm. There are many homemade baked goods, special jerky, and all kinds of buffalo-themed and Native American crafts. Maybe all of this is just kindling your own crafting urges. The chosen If you are a crafter, you might want to scout out some of our magnificent raw materials. We have craft shops that sell already-made crafts, and offer what you need to make your own. This charming little shop, right on the shores of the Hudson River, has an incredible array of fabric and notions of all kinds. Local artisans also stock the shop with their own creations. Paradox Crafts has charming items which celebrate summer, especially the long lazy lake summers on Paradox Lake. It is also a fine way to discover this beautiful spot which is so popular with boaters, paddlers, and campers. But I can tell you that you will have fun browsing. There are so many fascinating discoveries in our shops and studios. Set your GPS to "hidden treasures. Craft a cozy nest with our lodging. Enjoy a finely crafted meal with our dining. Read how you can participate note: At the very end of July there was a story about a searcher who drowned looking for the Treasure. I had not heard of this treasure before so it intrigued me. I actually warned myself not to look into it any further. I really got into this hunt and spent hours reading the book. It was extremely addicting to say the least. Well, my self-warning was to no availâ€”I did look further, and I got hooked. All of the knowledge I have gained during this search. I have googled about history, geography, American Indians, poetry, etc. It is truly amazing the amount of coincidence that is also associated with the poem and the hunt. But I have learned so much more than I knew before as a result. I think my least favorite thing is the feeling that I am not intelligent enough to solve the poem. It seems like a person who understands magic may solve the poem. It is a completely different way of thinking. But when we learn how it was done it is usually quite simpleâ€”but we were just not thinking in the right direction. I have a feeling the poem may have been written in the same way. There is something right in front of us that we are just not seeing. I have never done a BOTG search. I live in California, and I am waiting until I am very sure about the location before embarking on a search. But as I mentioned in response to another question, I have learned a lot of new things since stumbling upon this hunt back in I would just like to thank Forrest for having hid this treasure. It has been amazing investigating clues, and the amount of fun I have had is incredible. I also want to thank you, Jenny, and Dal for his blog also. The blogs are really a lot of fun to visit. And the people on the blogs are really good people with big hearts. Thanks so much for sharing your answers with us Sparrow! I apologize for missing these previously. You make some great points. Forrest recently said to keep it simple, and so it seems there is a way to look at the poem, like you say, that we are just not seeing. Best of luck with all that you seek! And remember, always Treasure the Adventure!

Do they really have meaningful chats with the fugitives on the way to jail and stop to buy them dinner? I wanted to know. I spent the day following a crew of bounty hunters who hunt for fugitives, both in Morgan County and in Denver. Grimes is a bail bondsman and bounty hunter in Morgan County. She is a little blonde woman who makes you feel like her best friend upon meeting. Soon I learn that she is also one tough lady. Bounty hunters stay on guard as they wait for an answer at the door. Though most of the fugitives are being sought for major crimes, some of the warrants are for minor things, like forgetting to go to traffic court. I tell Grimes, she may be arresting me first. She laughs, but the pink handcuffs in her pocket remind me that I may be in big trouble. I ask Grimes how in the heck she got into bounty hunting. This is a mother of six, who used to be a preschool teacher and now she spends her days hunting fugitives. We got along so well through the process and he treated myself and my husband so well. I was shocked that we actually became instant friends. Later in conversation he asked if I would be interested in bounty hunting and I thought sure why not. This involves learning the ins and outs of insurance from vehicles to boats and passing the state licensing exam. In addition to this, many bounty hunters participate in classes to learn the hands on tactical aspects of the trade, however it is not a requirement. Tactical classes teach things such as cuffing, hand to hand combat, use of tasers and even techniques and conditioning for foot chases. He pops up in her warrants list. Grimes must give him the bad news that his only option is to turn himself in, sit in jail for a few hours and then bond out. We meet him in a parking lot to drive him to the jail. The drive feels ironically like a road trip with friends. The poor guy is a nervous wreck, but a super nice guy. We chat about our weekend plans and what we did for the 4th of July. We get to the jail and the police come out to grab him. The feeling in the room is very calm and the transaction is quite peaceful. The police pat him down and he hands them his wrists for the cuffs. They walk into the holding area. Grimes assures the young man that we will return at 1: Noon - We begin driving around and scoping out the addresses where the fugitives or their co-signers for their bonds allegedly live, looking for signs that they may be there. Things like their vehicles, open windows, sprinklers running or doors open. If a person co-signs on a bond for someone and that person fails to appear in court, the co-singer can have their house searched at any time without a search warrant, by a bounty hunter. Finding these people is a personal matter for Grimes. When a bail bondsman puts up bail for someone and gets them released from jail, that bondsman is taking a huge risk. The only other answer is the least likely scenario, they get the co-signer on the bond to pay up. I was on the board for three weeks. Longest three weeks of my life," says Grimes. I ask him if he talked to anyone in the cell while he was there. We drive him back to his car and tell him he better not forget his next court date. He laughs and tells us he may get a tattoo of the date to remind him. We meet up with the other bounty hunters, who work in downtown Denver but come out to Fort Morgan to help Grimes with her hunts. The files and mugshots are laid out on the back of the car and everyone is filled in on who we are looking for. Police are alerted to the hunts and come out to meet us for a quick overview so that they can be ready, should something go south. Recently, they tell me that they assisted Denver Police in capturing a highly sought after fugitive from a nationally known murder case. Holland, one of the Denver hunters. His friends came out and thought he was in a ambulance parked on scene. They tried to jump in the ambulance to steal it. I know that this would be an epic level of bad, as there are many things on an ambulance that are highly dangerous in the hands of criminals. Holland must see the horror on my face. Immediately after the altercation and arrest, I started receiving death threats via text. I have no words at the moment. I love this job. I ask them what they feel in the moment when something goes badly during a hunt. I am buzzing inside with excitement. We pull up and park down the street from the first house. They all begin to surround the house, in silence. One of them hops a fence, the others cover window wells and the front and back doors. One stays near the street to see the whole scene at a glance. Once everyone is in place and all of the exits are covered, one of them begins knocking on the door. I am surprised by how smoothly this set up goes and how everyone seems calm, yet ready for anything. After five minutes of knocking, someone comes to the door. The woman tells us she no longer lives there but gives us her workplace and schedule. Everyone runs to their cars and we are off. Everyone stops as they see us and walks by slowly, as if they are sure we must be there for them. I ask them how they pick someone out of a big crowd. Their teeth, are they straight or are they are crooked? How big their ears are. The proportions of their face, like how far apart their eyes are, what type of nose they have. Then you learn to scan all of those things very quickly. We are off for the next person. A woman wanted on several accounts. We end up finding the uncle of the person were looking for but, unconvinced that she is not hiding inside, Grimes tells the uncle that we need to search the house. There are little kids there and I wonder if they are scared. The realness and humanity of these people in these situations really begins to hit me. These people who are breaking the law have an effect on everyone in their lives. These people were having a family dinner and now their home is being searched and ransacked by a group of people in tactical gear. We look in the dryer and under beds and in closets. We come upon the house and surround it as before. After a couple of knocks, a woman answers. Once again, I wait for them to tackle her and run into the house. She holds out her hands, knowing she is caught. They cuff her and notice she has a young child. They walk inside with her and help her get a hold of her husband to have him come home. They help her locate items the child may need and pack a bag for the child. Once everything is settled, they walk her to the vehicle. She looks visibly shaken. Learn your lesson this time. As we drive back to the jail and end our day together I ask Grimes what she wants the public to know about bounty hunters. I got to see an inside look into the lives of these fugitives and the people who love them. The repercussions of their actions are widespread and felt by many. We can only hope that they will all come around eventually. Until then, these bounty hunters will continue to get the adrenaline rush that they crave. Special thanks to 24 Hour Bail Bonds for their participation. For more information on becoming a bounty hunter, visit www.24hourbailbonds.com.
