East to West Boundaries: East River to Sixth Ave. North to South Boundaries: A classic New York neighborhood with a contemporary vibe. A healthy and diverse mix of long-time residents and newcomers. The elegant buildings and lovely streets offer the upscale feel of the Upper East Side, but are more convenient to Downtown. Established professionals take root in the luxury condo buildings spread across the neighborhood and enjoy the quiet, peaceful environs in the parts closer to the East River. A convenient neighborhood in the center of Manhattan that provides A-list cultural attractions and easy access to anywhere in the city. From the world-renowned shopping of Fifth Avenue to people-watching at Rockefeller Center, Midtown East is filled to the brim with picture-postcard New York City moments. The nexus of the neighborhood is Grand Central Station, one of the most historic landmarks of public transportation in the country. Besides shuttling visitors away on weekend escapes, Grand Central is also home to the foodie-friendly Grand Central Market, plus iconic restaurants including the Grand Central Oyster Bar and Campbell Apartment cocktail bar. Vibrant and bustling, with all the best of Manhattan living mere steps from your front door. Bryant Park is a popular hub in Midtown no matter the time of year. During the summer, people gather for yoga classes, outdoor movie screenings, and picnics. Come winter, neighbors spend afternoons ice skating here. Along the river in the East 40s, Tudor City is a highly sought-after complex of quiet residential towers with its own serene private green spaces. The non-stop party atmosphere of trendy Downtown neighborhoods. Michelin-starred eateries like Daniel and The Modern are plentiful. A mix of new development luxury condos and prestigious co-ops, plus more affordable walk-up rentals. With an array of of stately prewar towers and sleek full-service high-rises, there are lots of options in Midtown East, particularly at the higher end of the market. Classic townhouses provide even more options for spacious luxury homes. Beyond the luxury condo and coop buildings, renters will find plenty of options, particularly in the Turtle Bay section east of Lexington Avenue. The city skyline and waterfront vistas, best seen from above. While Midtown East is best known for being in the center of everything, for many residents the prime appeal is the tranquil setting along the East River. Many high-rise towers offer views stretching out over the river to Queens, up to the Ed Koch Queensboro Bridge, and across the skyline of Midtown Manhattan. A popular amenity in the neighborhood is a rooftop deck offering sweeping views.

New inventory flows in literally all day, as do throngs of customers. Despite its often elbow-to-elbow aisles, the store is worth a visit—just aim to go on a weekday morning to take advantage of its bargains before the crowds appear. Corso Como is the latest shopping mall iteration for the area, and this one will be a bit chicer, as it is curated by Carla Sozzani, a former editor of Italian Vogue magazine. In recent years, a number of outdoor markets have popped up in this neighborhood, making the outdoor scene quite lively. For store directories, visit www. The fish and herbal markets along Canal, Mott, Mulberry, and Elizabeth streets are fun for their bustle and exotica—as well as for the handful of Italian joints still hanging on from the Little Italy days. It can be a fun browse, but quality is questionable, and usually so are the sellers—and remember to bargain before busting out your wallet! Also, skip the bootleg perfumes and software—these are stolen goods, and you will be disappointed with the product. Perhaps the best matrix of Chinatown shops are the side streets tucked south of Canal, between Mott Street and the Bowery. Under a vintage pressed-tin ceiling, the shop sells good-quality Chinese toys, kits, and lanterns. In , the Canal Street Market opened. It is half food hall, and half stands of individual NYC-based artisans who make all sorts of cute and coy goods, from unusual perfumes, to jewelry, to housewares. We were also pleased to welcome back Pearl River Mart in , a mega store for all things Asian—silk goods, chopsticks, bling bling phone case holders and more. There are a handful of old-fashioned lingerie really girdle , leather goods, shoes, linens, and fabrics on the bolt shops. But the street today is mostly a hipster haunt, filled with art galleries, designer-owned tiny boutiques, craft beer emporiums and lots of bars and restaurants. However, Bowery between Kenmare St. F to Delancey St. Or you can preview the list and learn all things LES online at www. SoHo Over the past few decades SoHo has gone from undiscovered to uber-fashionable. But the fact is, no neighborhood rivals the ambiance here. And by the way, you can still buy original art direct from the artists lined up on Spring, Prince, and other high-traffic side streets right outside designer storefronts. But one longstanding hipster fave, Yellow Rat Bastard, Broadway tel. There also are several hot galleries along West Broadway and sprinkled throughout SoHo. You can find a full list of shops and galleries most are closed Monday at www. Elizabeth and neighboring Mott and Mulberry streets are dotted with stylish shops between Lafayette Street and the Bowery, below Houston to Kenmare. Nolita is the cousin of SoHo—making it cute and not cheap. Its curb-to-curb boutiques are largely the province of shopkeepers specializing in high-quality fashion-forward products. Calypso, Mott St. Nolita is also an accessories bonanza; stop in at Erica Weiner , Elizabeth St. Frankly, just cruising the blocks will do the trick in this area. There are too many fabulous shops to list. The East Village The East Village has long personified bohemian hip, though many New Yorkers would argue the area, with its shiny new condos, has been engulfed by gentrification. The easiest subway access is the no. The strip between Third and Second avenues, however, is a permanent street market with countless T-shirt stands, tattoo parlors, and boho jewelry storefronts. Beyond endless sunglasses and hat stands, here used-record and rock-memorabilia collectors can have a field day. For chi-chi stuff, walk on East 9th Street, between Second Avenue and Avenue A, to find an increasingly smart collection of boutiques, clothing, and otherwise. We especially like the clothes of independent designer Meg , E. That same strip also draws shopping hawks circling for vintage duds, which are bountiful in the East Village. Cobblestones, East 9th St. And if you enjoy sake, Sakaya E. It has grown into something of an Antiques Row, especially strong in furniture. Prices are high, but so is quality. The stretch to stroll is between 8th Street to the north and Spring Street to the south. Greenwich Village The West Village is great for browsing and gift shopping. Specialty bookstores and record stores, antiques and craft shops, and gourmet food markets dominate. But the biggest shopping boom of late has happened on Bleecker Street west of Sixth Avenue. In between are vintage stores, guitar shops, and a sprinkling of artsy boutiques. The Ink Pad

tel. The Village is full of adorable, locally owned storefronts like this one. These elegant stores stood in huge cast-iron buildings that eventually were abandoned. Fortunately, the past decade has seen those grand structures transform into to new superstores. The Meatpacking District has also zoomed from quaint to hot and some say over in no time, with such fashion emporiums as Jeffrey New York , W. In November and December, the Square also partly turns into a pop-up mall with the Holiday Market, brimming with handcrafted art, jewelry, gifts, clothes, and everything else. And then, certo, there is Eataly , at the stately northwest corner of Broadway and Fifth Avenue. A long block over on Seventh Avenue, not much goes on in the grimy, heavily industrial Garment District. Better to stick with buying souvenir trinkets and T-shirts at these joints. One of the more interesting is Scent Elate, W. Find out more at www. Wander over to 42nd Street to hit the big-name shops, like Lids, a chain that carries the official on-field baseball cap of every single major-league baseball team, and what seems like every variation, too. In addition, a good number of mainstream retailers, such as Uniqlo and Banana Republic, have flagships along Fifth, shifting the breadth of higher-end shopping to Madison Avenue north of 59th Street. You will find a number of big-name, big-ticket designers radiating from the crossroads, including Versace, Chanel, Dior, and Cartier. Uptown Madison Avenue Madison Avenue from 57th to 79th streets boasts the most expensive retail real estate in the world. Bring lots of plastic. The luxury boutiques of Madison Avenue will be happy you stopped by if only to peruse their treasures, and maybe even discover a bargain in the racks. Still further south, the Shops at Columbus Circle features not only some of the biggest and priciest names in retail, but also offer shopping with a view of Central Park. The heart of this shopping thoroughfare is between St. Also sprinkled among the big names are stores that represent the unique Harlem character. Hip-hop boutiques are mainstays, including two locations of Jimmy Jazz, and W. And with plenty more shopping to be found on side streets, you can also do a little online browsing to zero in on specific shops or merchandise at www. In recent years, Park Slope became officially great shopping territory, lined with endless adorable and diverse, independently owned retailers selling unique wares. The main action is along Fifth and Seventh avenues, both starting from Flatbush Avenue all the way down to about 15th Street. Its off-shoot Smorgasburg www. By subway[ edit ] Greenwich Village is served by many subway lines: The 4, 5, 6, and Q lines also serve Union Square. By bus[ edit ] The double-decker tour buses whisk their way up 6th Ave, but why not take an MTA bus , get off, and do your own tour? There is also the M7, which has its downtown terminus on 14th St and Broadway, just south of Union Sq. There are also crosstown buses: The M14 goes across 14th St. The M8 goes west on 9th and Christopher Sts, east on 10th and 8th Sts. The M14 is by far the most frequent at all hours. There is also a crosstown bus on Houston St, the M21, but it runs fairly infrequently and tends to get backed up in traffic, so it is not recommended if there is a good alternative. The M21 does not run between approximately midnight and 6AM. See the MTA website [25] for more information. On foot[ edit ] A tree-lined street in Greenwich Village If you are close enough to walk to the Village, do it. Walking is the best way to experience the character of neighborhoods in Manhattan and the contrast and continuity between them. Many people also ride along city streets in this neighborhood, many of which are pretty quiet side streets. The park and the famous arch is located in the heart of the Village. Though located in the middle of an affluent neighborhood, the park attracts a hodgepodge of people. The gallery is operated by the Westbeth Artists Residents Council. Still has several live acts each night for little or no cover charge. Extremely intimate bar atmosphere. Presents a great lineup of jazz performers in a quiet room except for the music that has good acoustics. Also has a lineup of famous jazz and blues performers. A great place to hear excellent jazz at low prices. Terra Blues is a modern-day Blues saloon in the heart of Greenwich Village. Each night begins at 7pm with an acoustic set, and is followed by a full electric band at 10pm. Having served up great music and good spirits for over 20 years, Terra Blues is a Greenwich Village fixture that will be here for 20 more. The oldest tour in Greenwich Village, and best researched. Keeping the history and inspiration of the village alive, while becoming an historic mainstay itself. One of them is located on Carmine St. Best place in the city to buy hardcore, metal, industrial, punk, and alternative records. A local independent bookstore, this microscopic yet utterly delightful place is the essence of Greenwich Village, with an extremely knowledgeable and passionate staff. There are also some well-known upscale restaurants in the neighborhood. A popular local pizza restaurant with an "old-time" theme, serving coal oven pizza with a lightly charred, crispy crust. There is often live jazz. Describes itself as "a quintessential corner of England in the heart of Greenwich Village", typically English meals are available here perfect for the Anglophile or homesick Brit! Reserve a month in advance or stand on line before opening time 5: Babbo is one of the hardest restaurants to get a reservation at in New York, which should indicate something about its popularity. An upscale American restaurant known for its fresh ingredients and subtlety. Call ahead for reservations. The pizzeria in the Batali chain. Prices are much cheaper here than at Babbo, but the entire concept of the restaurant is different, so take it for what it is. The antipasti and gelati as well as the pizza are well thought of. Excellent vegetarian soul food, organic wines. This is a very good, relatively informal, mid-priced eatery, with a good and fair-priced wine list. Every fan has their own favorite dishes. First-timers may want to share several smaller dishes instead of having full meals, in order to sample the cuisine, but the primi and secondi are also worthy. The excellent Tartufo is their best dessert. Reservations recommended; otherwise, you may have a long wait. A classic New York pizza place - a gritty joint with brick oven, thin crust pizza. The lines are often long but the service is fast. Whole pies only, no slices. Cash and travelers checks only. A very popular corner pizza joint that serves huge, thin crust slices fresh out of the oven. The hotel offers on-site fine dining and stylish accommodations at a central New York City location. This hotel offers art deco styled furnishings and complimentary internet access at the lobby bar and considers itself a haven for writers, artists and visitors.

One of the Hopper farmhouses, built in for John Hopper the younger, stood near 53rd Street and Eleventh Avenue; christened "Rosevale" for its extensive gardens, it was the home of the War of veteran, Gen. Garrit Hopper Striker, and lasted until , when it was demolished. The site was purchased for the city and naturalistically landscaped by Samuel Parsons Jr. Before long, cattle ferried from Weehawken were being driven along the unpaved route to slaughterhouses on the East Side. Unity with the city and deterioration[ edit ] This section needs additional citations for verification. Please help improve this article by adding citations to reliable sources. Unsourced material may be challenged and removed. The track ran at a steep grade up Eleventh Avenue, as far as 60th Street. The tenements that were built became overcrowded quickly. Many who lived in this congested, poverty-stricken area turned to gang life. At the start of the 20th century, the neighborhood was controlled by gangs, including the violent Gopher Gang led by One Lung Curran and later by Owney Madden. It became known as the "most dangerous area on the American Continent". After the repeal of Prohibition , many of the organized crime elements moved into other rackets, such as illegal gambling and union shakedowns. The postwar era was characterized by a flourishing waterfront, and longshoreman work was plentiful. By the end of the s, however, the implementation of containerized shipping led to the decline of the West Side piers and many longshoremen found themselves out of work. It was not until the early s that widespread gentrification began to alter the demographics of the longtime working-class Irish American neighborhood. First wave of gentrification[ edit ] Special Clinton zoning district[ edit ] Eighth Avenue was once lined with porn stores and theaters. The stores have been mostly gone since the late s, but this particular store, which was highlighted in the film Phone Booth , remained until Javits Convention Center was approved for a 44th Street site that would replace piers 84 and But in exchange, and after the defeat of a bond issue that would have funded a 48th Street "people mover," [28] the City first abandoned the rest of the "70 master plan [29] and then gave the neighborhood a special zoning district to restrict further redevelopment. Later, in , when the city could not afford to construct the 44th Street convention center, the Mayor and Governor chose the rail yard site originally proposed by the local community. R-7 density, 6-story height limit on new buildings, suggested average apartment size of two bedrooms this was a response to the fact that between and developers had torn down 2, family-sized units and replaced them with 1, smaller units. Eighth Avenue, 42nd and 57th Streets. Bulkier development permitted to counterbalance the downzoning in the preservation area. Tenth and Eleventh Avenues between 43rd and 50th Streets. Mixed residential and manufacturing. New residential development only permitted in conjunction with manufacturing areas. Later combined into "Other Areas". West of Eleventh Avenue. Industrial and waterfront uses. Later combined with "Mixed Use Area" Special permits are required for all demolition and construction in the SCD, including demolition of "any sound housing in the District" and any rehabilitation that increases the number of dwellings in a structure. In the original provisions. Windermere[ edit ] Windermere Apartments at 57th and Ninth As the gentrification pace increased, there were numerous reports of problems between landlords and tenants. The most extreme example was the eight-story Windermere complex at the southwest corner of Ninth Avenue and 57th Street. Built in , it is the second-oldest large apartment house in Manhattan. Weissman, tried to empty the building of its tenants. According to former tenants and court papers, rooms were ransacked, doors were ripped out, prostitutes were moved in, and tenants received death threats in the campaign to empty the building. As of May , seven tenants remained [35] and court orders protecting the tenants and the building allowed it to remain in derelict condition even as the surrounding neighborhood was experiencing a dramatic burst of demolition and redevelopment. Finally, in September , the fire department evacuated those remaining seven residents from the building, citing dangerous conditions, and padlocked the front door. Both the state and the city hoped that the Jacob K. Javits Convention Center would renew the area. No changes to the zoning policy happened until , when the city rezoned a small segment of 11th Avenue near the Javits Center. Elad, which formerly owned the Plaza Hotel , is in the process of building The Link, a luxury story building. The most prominent real estate project in the area is the Hudson Yards Redevelopment Project , which will include over 45 million square feet of commercial and residential development, a renovation of the Jacob K. Covering an area of Hispanic or Latino of any race were The neighborhood does not have many parks or recreational areas, though smaller plots have been converted into green spaces. Since they mostly work at night in the local theatres, they took time to create a garden in what was then a rubble-strewn lot on West 48th Street between Ninth and Tenth avenues. Given the lower costs in the past and its proximity to Broadway theatres , the neighborhood is a haven for aspiring actors. This is due in large part to the Actors Studio on West 44th at which Lee Strasberg taught and developed method acting. With the opening of the original Improv by Budd Friedman in , the club became a hangout for singers to perform but quickly attracted comedians, as well, turning it into the reigning comedy club of its time. Once located near West 44th Street and Ninth Avenue, it has since shuttered, replaced by a restaurant. Manhattan Plaza at 43rd Street between Ninth and Tenth Avenues was built in the s to house artists. In , it moved from its quarters at 54th Street and Tenth Avenue to a new studio in the neighborhood, at Eleventh Avenue, between 51st and 52nd Streets. The 54th and 10th location was used for The Colbert Report throughout its entire run from until Restaurant Row , so called because of the abundance of restaurants, is located on West 46th Street between Eighth and Ninth Avenues. There are more restaurants and food carts and trucks on Tenth Avenue between 43rd and 47th Streets, including Hallo Berlin. USS Intrepid Museum[ edit ].
