I can remember vividly reading about her abrupt diagnosis with a malignant and inoperable melanoma in her lungs back in early December. It all happened so quickly. My thoughts and prayers are with her family as they cope with this tragic loss. Miss Judy was a gifted artisan jewelry designer with a style that I admired and a giving spirit that drew people to her. She could take the most amazing vintage treasures and breathe new life into them, adding her own special touches with her amazing etched copper pieces. She was a published author who contributed her talents to some of the best publications out there. Judy will be sorely missed. It is just one small thing that I could do to show support for someone who always had a kind and encouraging word for me, someone I admired. My intention is that I will make a piece inspired by Miss Judy herself. I will keep you posted when I receive the pieces and get inspired. She added art beads from all over, including the newest Simple Truth Sampler for March that she just received. I have seen snow in June. The words "sow seeds of love" just came to me as I was making them. Sometimes that is how it happens, the inspiration just strikes when I am playing with the design. When we bring love to everything we do, we can change the world. From the tiniest actions, the smallest seeds, great things can grow. When you plant that seed of love, however small that seed may be, more seeds will be born to be sown again. Sort of like a ripple of a pebble in a pond, each seed gets blown on the wind to touch the lives of those we may never meet. So what are these seeds that we sow with great love? They do not need to be grand nuts of immense sacrifice. The best seeds are the ones that are small Smiling at those we pass on the street Picking up a piece of litter on the sidewalk instead of stepping over it Each of these actions is planting a seed that can grow into more love and respect, and hopefully be blown on the wind to touch someone else with its simple beauty. It is like that commercial where each person witnesses someone else doing something nice for another complete stranger and then passing on that courtesy to the next person they meet, eventually coming full circle. Each time a seed of love is sown, another sprout grows from the first seed, another ripple flows out widening the circle. We will miss you. What seeds of love have you planted today?

Waiting with her mother at the checkout stand, she saw them: Can I have them? After dinner, she did more than her share of chores and she went to the neighbor and asked Mrs. McJames if she could pick dandelions for ten cents. On her birthday, Grandma did give her another new dollar bill and at last she had enough money to buy the necklace. Jenny loved her pearls. They made her feel dressed up and grown up. She wore them everywhere—Sunday school, kindergarten, even to bed. The only time she took them off was when she went swimming or had a bubble bath. Mother said if they got wet, they might turn her neck green. Jenny had a very loving daddy and every night when she was ready for bed, he would stop whatever he was doing and come upstairs to read her a story. You know that I love you. But you can have Princess—the white horse from my collection. The one with the pink tail. The one you gave me. But you can have my babydoll. The brand new one I got for my birthday. She is so beautiful and you can have the yellow blanket that matches her sleeper. God bless you, little one. A few nights later when her daddy came in, Jenny was sitting on her bed with her legs crossed Indian-style. As he came close, he noticed her chin was trembling and one silent tear rolled down her cheek. And when she opened it, there was her little pearl necklace. He had had them all the time. He was just waiting for her to give up the dime-store stuff so he could give her genuine treasure. So like our heavenly Father. What are you hanging on to?

Treasures to one person may not be of interest to another person. What we treasure can vary from artefacts left to us from relatives, to coins, jewellery, real estate, antique cars and so on. Sometimes we treasure the accumulation of wealth accompanied by a continuous desire to have more and more. There seems to be no limit to the spiral of how much is enough. Fear Of Loss The most earthly thought when treasures are accumulated is the fear that your treasures will be lost, stolen or destroyed. To some, the overriding thought of joy or peace never seems to be attained no matter how many treasures are stored or acquired. The reason is really quite simple why this is the case. The reason is this: And, we all will die no matter how much we have or possess. Keeping The Most Valuable Treasures But, the good news is that there are treasures that can be stored for you - ones that will never rust or be stolen or decay. Read on to find out. Store your treasures in heaven, where moths and rust cannot destroy, and thieves do not break in and steal. A simple example is to help and give to the poor without expecting any earthly return. The Simple Secret of Achieving Guaranteed Financial Results", "When we use money for righteous purposes, we are laying up treasure in heaven. I want to use it to invest in churches and ministries that are investing in people. I want my money to be used for helping people, loving people, feeding people and caring for people. What would you rather have? Inspirational Quotes for Reflection: However, success, money, and fame do not equal fulfillment. Musser, Finding the True You: Each person becomes a precious treasure that deserves the utmost care.

I listened to you breathing. I counted your fingers and your toes. Helpless, you cried out to me and I loved you with every ounce of my soul. Will you hear me when I cry out? Will you hold me close as I held you then? I remember the day You took your first step. There was no stopping you. Your feet gave you freedom to explore the world like never before but danger lurked. I opened those doors anyway, cautiously, and introduced you to the world. Where will you be when my legs no longer run? Will you realize that I love freedom too? I laugh about that day you first tied your shoe. We tried and tried to get that rabbit in that hole and you finally did it. You pointed your toes for everyone to see how proud you were. I am proud too, of my writing and my drawing, of my needlework and my cooking. But my hands are beginning to ache and my fingers will not bend. I will lose the things that make me proud except for you. Will you let me brag on you? Even tell wild stories that are a bit beyond the truth? Will you be proud of me too? I waved good-bye that morning when you left on that large, yellow bus. I was so scared. I know you were too. You waved at me bravely through the dusty window but I saw the water forming in your eyes. You came home, however, full of pride and joy. You sang the alphabet song and got most of it right. You practiced for hours until you could sing it even in your sleep. I forgot whether I took my pills today or not. I forgot if I told this story before. I even forgot once who you were and it terrified me. My mind is my treasure the only thing I have left, and I heard you make fun of me for not remembering that I gave you the same gift as last year. Will you love me when I no longer know who I am? You came home blushing from the glow of your first kiss. Your first love, the one you thought was real. You talked about him non-stop. You changed for him. But he left you anyway for a blue-eyed girl and I held you while you cried for him. I too have a broken heart. The love of my life left me after fifty-six years. He left me here to live life on my own while he moved on to another realm And I cry for him too. I long for his shoulder and strong embrace. I feel betrayed because he and I made a deal that we would never leave the other alone. Yet I am alone sitting in an echoing house with no hands to hold. You welcomed her home today- your tiny baby girl. She has your eyes and possibly your toes. I see you counting them as they roll me into the room. You finally came to visit. It has been a while. You look up at me with tears in your eyes and ask almost desperately, "Will she tie my shoes when I get old?"

I seek constantly to improve my manners and graces, for they are the sugar to which all are attracted. Laugh at yourself and at life. Not in the spirit of derision or whining self-pity, but as a remedy, a miracle drug, that will ease your pain, cure your depression, and help you to put in perspective that seemingly terrible defeat and worry with laughter at your predicaments, thus freeing your mind to think clearly toward the solution that is certain to come. Never take yourself too seriously. The great man or woman is the one who never steps outside his or her specialty or foolishly dissipates his or her individuality. Henceforth will I apply ALL my efforts to become the highest mountain of all and I will strain my potential until it cries for mercy. If he raises all his energy to that end, he is a benefactor of mankind and its rewarded as such. Francis of Assisi I can only wonder what treasure awaits at the top of the path.
