Jonny and Hadji must enter a world of virtual reality in order to decide whether Q-Space is truly magical or a sinister scientist is behind the simulation, and they must choose sides in a battle of witchery versus science in order to save Dr. Benton Quest.

As fellow baby-boomers may recall, Jonny Quest originally aired in prime-time on ABC during the television season. The show ran on Friday nights at 6: Instead of an animated Jack, Wildey came up with a spirited Jonny! Jonny Quest was the adventurous young son of widower Dr. Those opening credits promised all kinds of eye-opening action in upcoming episodes. Eight-year-old kids like me were treated to snippets of a screeching pteranodon, a rampaging mummy, a pair of giant lizards on leashes, and a weird cyclopean eye that crept about on spidery legs. Jonny Quest had instantly become my favorite TV show! Quest and his team to come to Ghiva to search for the stolen artifact. Ahmed schemes to blame Dr. Quest and Race for the theft, but the mummy eventually catches up with him. Holding a struggling Ahmed over its head, the mummy and Ahmed perish when Ghiva catacombs topple on top of them. Yes, this plot is straight out of a Universal mummy movie of the s, but so what? The mummy itself is great – tall, unstoppable, powerful; in one early scene it impressively bursts through a wall. Alerted to the object, Dr. Quest and Race tow a large, black globe from the craft back to base. The latter reveals itself to be a robot spy of Dr. Before long, it has recorded the plans for Dr. The military attempts to stop the metallic emissary, but nothing can halt its implacable stride. Once the cyclopean spy is back inside the abandoned flying craft in which it arrived, it appears all hope is lost – until Dr. Some might not consider Dr. Before seeing this episode, I had thought, based on the JQ opening credits montage, that the eerie creature was alive. It seems that the not-so-good doctor has turned lizards into fierce dragon-like monsters the size of large horses; Dr. Ashida sometimes stages dragon vs. Race wins the match. Ashida tells the Quests they still cannot leave. However, the Quests do escape, and the more-than-fed-up Sumi tosses Dr. Ashida to the very beasts the scientist has created. The Ashida dragons look fairly impressive, resembling fierce, mutated iguanas. They get to tree Dr. Ashida – offscreen of course. Quest and company discover that a mad slaver named Deen has imprisoned natives on a high plateau; there, Deen forces them to mine the same mineral the Quest crew has sailed into the jungle to retrieve. Deen controls Turu, a huge pteranodon that both kidnaps natives for the mining crew and makes sure none of the natives escape. Quest quickly run afoul of Turu; Deen subsequently orders the flying monster to kill them. Armed with a bazooka, Race fires several shells at the winged terror until it crashes into a tar pit. Deen attempts to save his prehistoric companion, but instead perishes along with his pet. Turu also sports a fierce screech, and his many swoops and attacks are well-rendered. In addition, Turu and Deen evoke a certain pathos. Turu is clearly obedient to Deen, yet Deen consoles the pteranodon when it initially fails to find and kill Dr. While obviously evil in other ways, Deen shows, in his nurturing of Turu, that he at least had a little good in him. The fearful scientist radios Dr. In short order, Dr. Quest and company discover that a living but transparent energy monster is loose on the island. Utilizing their rocket belts, the Quest team drops paint bombs on the invisible organism, which is revealed to be a strange, ghost-like creature with one eye and a wide, wavering mouth. This episode featured my favorite JQ creature. Once the Invisible Monster became visible, I remember being really knocked out. This thing was weird, it was alien, it was -- dare I say it? Just as effective as its bizarre graphic realization was the weird, Theramin-like cry that wailed from its quivering cave of a mouth. Of course, the episode did cheat a little. But when it becomes visible, it leaves no footprints at all since it clearly has no feet! Quest and spirits him to nearby Moy Tu island. Ling has developed a method that turns ordinary creatures into giants, and he insists that Dr. Quest help him work out some bugs in his process. Quest of course refuses. Meanwhile, Race acquires the help of Jade, a former flame, who agrees to help. Quest, only to find a gun at his back. Ling tries to escape by boat, but one of his creations, a gigantic lizard, arises from the sea and forces him and his henchmen to flee to shore. There, the monstrous reptile blunders into a tangle of high-voltage wires, electrocuting both itself and Ling. This episode even features two dueling kaiju -- a gigantic crab and a king-sized spider who engage in creature combat on Moy Tu Island. Raj Guru, one of Dr.

As it turns out, the so-called Yeti are actually the henchmen of the conniving Osom, who wants to take over the village for his own purposes. Quest, Race, and Raj Guru. And yes, this could bring to mind the fury of the abominable snowman of Half Human. Quest and company spot the Star of Borneo and, using the Quest vertical take-off jet, land on the deserted ship. The Quests discover Charlie, a Chinese cook, hiding in a freezer locker, as well as the fact that the marauding monster is deterred only by fire and strong light. Quest use search lights and blow torches to hold the creature at bay, but Charlie saves the day by causing the monster to fall from the mast into the ocean below. At the end, Quest and company are rescued while the sea monster swims deeper and deeper into the dark ocean depths. The sea creature, which Dr. Quest describes as a cross between the mythical beasts the manticore and hippocampus, makes for a suitably scaly opponent. However, the series found new life via reruns. In 1982, CBS picked up the show for their Saturday morning lineup and kept it on their schedule until 1984. Then, ABC ran it on Saturdays from 1984 to 1986. Finally, NBC got hold of the show in 1986. In 1987, Hanna-Barbera produced thirteen new episodes of Jonny Quest and teamed them with the original twenty-six episodes in a single syndication package. These elements clashed with the more restrained aspects of the original twenty-six episodes. The Cyber Insects As for the Jonny Quest of the 1980s, it still evokes fond memories for many a Monster Kid. Brimming with spirited adventure and creepy creatures, Jonny Quest lives on in the ten-year-old hearts of many a fortysomething adult.

Hoist by His Own Petard: The phrase is almost used word for word in "The Darkest Fathoms. In "Eclipse", a succubus-like creature entices Hadji and tries to drain Jessie of her lifeforce. I Know Mortal Kombat: In the episode Nemesis, Jonny and Hadji lose their jeep and acquire a tank. Hadji asks Jonny if he knows how to operate one, and Jonny replies "Tank Leader 2. Highest score ever recorded. A rather odd example, from Lorenzo of all people, in "Without a Trace. Jonny, Jessie and Hadji get themselves captured while trying to rescue the President. Bandit is also there. Can I keep him? It took sending him back to prehistoric times with a nuke before he was finally considered dead. We make a pretty good team, dad. Especially when the chips are down. In "Amok", among others. Just a Stupid Accent: To the point that the accented English actually becomes impossible to understand: See "Rock of Rages". Killed Off for Real: Therefore, just to be sure , he got sent back to prehistoric times and blown up by a nuclear bomb, leaving his mask behind for good measure. Kissing Under the Influence: Jonny and Jessie in "Ghost Quest. Hadji and another character convince the spirits to literally kiss and make up Jessie even teases Jonny about it later in the episode. Jonny is prone to Ice Cream Koans. This is promptly lampshaded: Every great fiction held strongly in human belief is the mistaken image of some great truth. What the heck does that mean? The Monster of the Week in "Diamonds and Jade". An interesting variation appears in "Ice Will Burn". Or daughters in the case of Dr. Zin, although only Anaya actually fits the "falls in love with a hero" part of the trope. The trope is hilariously subverted in "Trouble on the Colorado," though: There was never an upskirt shot, ever. In "Heroes," going with the Greek theme. Which is ironic because the second season features Quest World more frequently than the first. Said cousin kills the uncle in a flashback, and said cousin gets his , allowing Hadji to take his birthright, which he shares with his mother. The teasers for "To Bardo and Back" featured Jonny and Jessie fighting some kind of mechanized bull creature. Nothing remotely like this appears in the episode. New Powers as the Plot Demands: Quite a number of people though rarely major characters and never anyone on the main team end up getting pretty blatantly killed off. No Eye in Magic: Surd via reflection, he made Medusa! Surd see his own reflection in it so he would petrify himself. No One Could Survive That: Usually given to the Villain of the Week in some variation. However, with Ezekiel Rage, one of his recurring tropes was his subverting it. Race uses the phrase verbatim referring to his inspector friend, the one with 10 children, in "Diamonds and Jade. An exception with two Estellas: Oddly, there are also two "Dr. Only Known by Their Nickname: A genetic disorder that only affects men. Hadji tries to "calm its raging spirit" You do not touch his "Ponchita. Not even an evil demon can keep him from saving Jonny. Phlebotinum Killed the Dinosaurs: Via the nuke Ezekiel Rage took with him to the past in his last episode. Jessie has a pink shirt, and when the team gets swim gear or parkas that are identical save for their colors, Jessie gets the pink ones. A Pirate Years Too Late: The fake ghost pirates in "The Darkest Fathoms". Jonny, Jessie and Hadji, although which kind of power trio they are is hard to pinpoint. Another way of seeing them is the Freudian way: Hadji as a rare, not exactly unemotional Super-Ego. Jonny as the impulsive, emotion-driven Id. Jessie as the Ego, who has a lot of the emotions of the Id, balanced with much of the rationality of the Super-Ego. Race Against the Clock:

Fred Seibert touted Quest as the "Home Alone of adventure", with "high-tech, multicultural themes" that would appeal to contemporary youth. Using video post-production high-end specialized tools, including Henry, Spirit, Flame, and others, the team strove to deliver a high-speed computer editing and post-production process. Example of digital painting for a reflective water texture in "East of Zanzibar" We almost have a fine cut before we start animating. The pencil test is imported into the computer By having camera mounts on multiple levels, it enables us to review the whole show without the animation. We can re-cut the show effectively ADR the show and not only send the tape, but print it as well. The tape goes to the compositor and the whole thing is laid together way upfront. This is the same group that set up and maintained the in-house digital ink and paint systems for Hanna Barbera as well as the Avid and Pro Tools systems used in Post Production. The group was founded and managed by Stephen Toback. QuestWorld characters were created as wire frame models, augmented with faces scanned from clay busts, then digitally painted and inked. The Quests would sparingly fight "monsters of the week", instead battling antagonists whose conflicts lay in "personal objective or ambition Quest with a fleet of air, land, and sea vehicles, including a s biplane and state-of-the-art catamaran named Questor with diving bells and smaller research vessels stored in the hulls. We decided to make the show more Jonny-centric. Quest and Race show. Jonny was just hanging out after all, what can a year-old do? Hadji Quest, age 16, became Dr. He can do more plausible stuff. There is an episode where Hadji pretends to stop his breathing so that the bad guys think he is dead. Jessie Bannon, age 15, was characterized to be just as tough, smarter, and more thoughtful than Jonny. Written as "more of an egghead", she elected to spend time with Dr. Quest as Jonny did with Race, and was "more in tune with Hadji". Peter Lawrence sculpted Race to be a "cowboy philosopher or philosopher-warrior". Benton Quest, age 55, retired from government research and operated from the "Quest Compound" on the coast of Maine. Quest regained his classic red hair and exhibited rudimentary combat skills. Falk regarded Jessie as the "missing piece needed to complete the Quest family", and Leopold added slight romantic overtones to episodes. Jonny saved Jessie from danger several times. Leopold and Falk sought to create a "slam-bang adventure show with real monsters" and heightened narrative emphasis on Jonny and his friends. Quest would have turned the system off. Zin and his twin daughters, Anaya and Melana,. Jeremiah Surd in favor of new adversaries. Roth as Jonny, George Segal as Dr. Jeremiah Surd and Ezekiel Rage, respectively. A childhood fan of the original series, J. He looks up to him and thinks he is the smartest man ever to walk to face of the earth. He has the typical teenage relationship with his father, but his father definitely sees something in him. Quest knows that Jonny is going to be something really special. I mean, how many East Indian heroes have been on television? Hadji is for the sensitive kids out there. He is the outsider in all of us. Jessie is pretty cool. It is not like she is a girl who is whining all the time. If anything, she is a really good springboard for the rest of the storyline. I think something will happen between them but right now Jess is his best friend. That was quite remarkable. Quest, but was forced into retirement by a stroke during early sessions. Van Dusen voiced Bannon in the Quest series, and Foxworth took over the part after auditioning for Dr. Turner also marketed Zebco fishing poles bearing the Quest logo. Turner listed several products in a "Quest Adventure Value Pack" coupon catalogue. Metropolitan newspapers worked with Turner to promote the videos through grab-bag give-aways. I have always thought those letters looked more like script JA than anything else. Others have argued that the letters are "JQ" and were added to the clip for copyright reasons; I have, in the past, let myself be swayed by those arguments. To be honest, if one looks at an enlargement of the plane, the letters could very well be "JQ". It seems to be pretty clear when looked at with a fresh eye. I asked a non-JQ fan to look at the image, and asked "What do you see? The second letter looks pretty close to the Quest "Q", but the first letter could be a "J" or a reversed "C", or something else entirely. One possibility is that the symbols are actually "X2", written closely together to provide some sort of logo effect. No idea what "X2" might mean, of course. However, any resolution will have to involve not only a visual check but also a logical one. No one has come forward with the official explanation of why those letters are there in that clip known to be from the Jack Armstrong pilot effort. I think we are unlikely to get one. No letters appear on the plane in the rest of the Jonny Quest episodes. And actually, the letters are even missing from the tail fin during another part of the Jack Armstrong clip - the part where the hovercraft enters the plane. Recent conversations with fans have led me to reconsider both sides but not reach any firm conclusions. Not that any of this will settle the matter once and for all; to the contrary, I think this debate will continue for the indefinite future, until some authority or technology arises to resolve the discussion. My new thinking as I said: It makes sense to me that the letters are JA, because Jack Armstrong was a very well-known franchise at the time, having spent years in production on radio. Some have questioned why the initials of a high-school student as originally presented in the Jack Armstrong radio programs would be emblazoned on the tail fin of a plane owned and operated by someone by the name of Jim Fairfield the uncle of friends of Jack, Billy and Betty Fairfield. I agree that it does not make much sense from that context. However, at the time Hanna-Barbera was working on the pilot effort, the radio program had moved on from its initial premise. Jack Armstrong had graduated from high school and was now working for a government agency called the Science Bureau of Investigation SBI. Perhaps this was now the venue for the series being developed by Hanna-Barbera? If so, it is slightly more likely that Jack would have his own plane, and would possibly have those "JA" letters on the tail fin. There were no copyright issues raised when the clip was used for Jonny Quest, probably because the Jack Armstrong folks did not own the copyright on the clip -- rather Hanna-Barbera if anyone did. And the letters are so small and unclear especially when viewed on TV screens typical in the 60s and the duration of the scene is so short, that no one ever thought there was or would be a problem. For, if the letters were JQ and they were added to the clip, one would certainly think they would subsequently appear in the show as well - but they did not. The "JQ" arguments a visual check of an enlarged image seems to show the letters "JQ" rather clearly. The letters appear only in one segment. If they were part of the original segment, one would expect them to show up in both segments of the clip that show the tail fin. The letters are not drawn with the same clarity of line that the rest of the artwork shows. It makes sense that this would only occur if the clip was going to be re-used for the Jonny Quest project; therefore the argument is for the letters "JQ". There were copyright issues raised when the clip was used for Jonny Quest, probably by the Jack Armstrong folks. So Hanna-Barbera attempted to differentiate the original clip from the Jack Armstrong effort by adding "JQ" in that single place. That may have been enough to satisfy the Jack Armstrong folks, and so no other symbols were added to the ending credits or to the episodes. The bottom line It really comes down to visual arguments vs. Each type seems to indicate a different answer. Arguing from logic says it makes no sense for "JQ" to be on one segment only, that H-B did not do any unnecessary work and so left the "JA" in place, and that by enlarging the image beyond normal expectations may also be distorting it. Unfortunately, your guess is as good as mine.

The Real Adventures of Jonny Quest (also known as Jonny Quest: The Real Adventures) is an American animated action-adventure television series produced by Hanna-Barbera and broadcast on Cartoon Network from August 26, to April 16, Quest by Alice Starseer is shining, and informs his sleeping father. Nearby, three men and one woman are performing an Anasazi ritual with a feather dropped in a puddle and dust sprinkled into the air. The people continue their ritual as one man lights a peace pipe and blows smoke on the feather. The team soon enter dangerous waters, and after a maneuver to avoid a branch throws them slightly off course, the raft overturns on a rock as Jonny struggles to reel Bandit in. Quest and Race are nearby on a shore and reel in Jessie and Hadji, who has lost his helmet and turban. Bandit is nowhere to be found, his life jacket having ominously washed up on the canyon beach. Quest laments losing some gear and rations, but Jonny finds paw prints and pleads with his father to search for Bandit and rendezvous with Race and Benton at sunset. He acquiesces to the request, and Jonny, Jessie, and Hadji set out to find their pawed friend. Quest cannot wait to meet Alice and hear of her trip, including visits to other galaxies. The teens find that the paw prints lead to a steep canyon wall, while Jessie find an inscription denoting the presence of the Colorado Exploration Expedition. Jonny reasons that if the one-armed Powell did it in the Old West, he is well qualified to climb the walls. At night, Benton and Race wait in one of the Anasazi cliff dwellings; suddenly, Lorenzo appears with a submachine gun and orders them to stand down. Race kicks a log at him from the fire and tangles as the gun is knocked away. In the resulting fight, Lorenzo feigns forfeiture before reaching for the gun. Race trips him up with a stick thrown to him by Dr. Quest, but as Benton recovers the gun, Julia enters and trains her gun on him. At the cliff, Jonny and Jessie have made it, the latter wondering how Bandit climbed the canyon. Act Two The alien homeworld Hadji nears disaster as the hold crumbles further; Jonny tries to reach him with a rope but is two feet short. He spots a shrub nearby and ties his feet to it, then lowers Jessie down by holding on to her ankles. Hadji is able to reach her and climb up, and there the team find the Native Americans from before with Bandit. Back at the ruins, Julia and Lorenzo load Race and Dr. Jonny, Jessie, and Hadji with the Native Americans go to the ruins, and find shell casings and blood from the scuffle. She resists, appearing as a demonic scorpion; Surd overpowers her and begins exploring her memories of the galaxy, witnessing the birth of a star in the process. Quest and Race face death upon the edge of a cliff, Jonny, Hadji, and the Indians from before appear, distracting Julia and Lorenzo as Jessie unties her elders. The combined attack quickly subdues both foes as Race satisfyingly punches Julia. Just as Surd finds the alien home planet in her memory, Benton disconnects him. They then let Surd go free, as tribal custom dictates that the chief cannot pass well unless all prisoners are freed. Alice drops the father on his mummified body and sprinkles dust before singing into the night.

I admit, that version of the classic Jonny Quest theme song from the 60's is really badass and intense.

The series follows Dr. Writer, Peter Lawrence set the story a few years after the classic series, making Jonny and his friends teenagers. Stressing plausibility, he suggested writers cover real-world enigmas, cryptozoology, unique locales, an alien posing as the vice president, and fictional but "believable" mysteries. Ezekiel Rage, a former government agent left for dead on a botched mission, would try to destroy the world with nuclear terrorism. The Quests would sparingly fight "monsters of the week", instead battling antagonists whose conflicts lay in "personal objective or ambition Lawrence stationed the family at a new compound on the coast of Maine, replete with houses, barns, and workshops. Rooms suited for each character included a library for Dr. Quest with a fleet of air, land, and sea vehicles, including a biplane and state-of-the-art catamaran named Questor with diving bells and smaller research vessels stored in the hulls. Hadji Singh – Age 16, became Dr. Hadji often used wise aphorisms, taken from diverse cultures and sources, sometimes baffling Jonny. There is an episode where Hadji pretends to stop his breathing so that the bad guys think he is dead. Benton Quest – Age 55, retired from government research and operated from the "Quest Compound" on the coast of Maine. Driven by curiosity, he was "consulted by individuals, governments and corporations" to investigate enigmatic events. Described as "single-minded" – almost to the point of obsession – in his pursuit of knowledge, he often encountered trouble as "his drive to learn blanks out more basic instincts like self-preservation. He married Rachel Wildey, whom bore Benton a son, Johnathan, but was killed by an adversarial, undisclosed event some years later. Benton Quest for several years as a government-assigned bodyguard, and now by choice. Race came from a western American setting, acquiring several colorful similes and turns of phrase growing up. He worked for government agencies in various roles, eventually retiring to work solely with Dr. He is the father of Jessie Bannon. She identifies with Dr. Quest more than her father, and is eager to analyze new information and help in the course of Dr. Her father often calls her by the nickname "panchita". Jeremiah Surd – One of the main antagonists in The Real Adventures of Jonny Quest, his main goal is to take revenge against Race Bannon for the incident that left him disabled. He also wants to completely take over Questworld and use it for criminal purposes. Surd is ruthless, cruel and extremely dangerous with a burning hatred for Race Bannon and the Quests. Although paralysed in the real world, he is a great danger in the virtual world of Questworld using it for his own evil purposes.
