During the weeks leading up to the royal wedding, the impact of Andrew's problems on the future of the monarchy was the subject of much discussion in London. The festivities coincided with the.

Scheer has signaled he plans to move the CPC from the relatively moderate positions it often adopted under interim leader Rona Ambrose, who recently announced she is leaving politics. Harper may have been a committed conservative but he was also a pragmatist; Scheer is far more theologically driven and is now heavily in electoral debt to social conservatives. He is a traditional Roman Catholic, the son of a deacon. He is an opponent of abortion, equal marriage, trans rights and euthanasia. He voted against Bill C, which adds "gender expression or identity" as a protected ground to the Canadian Human Rights Act. While Scheer has insisted that he will not open up most of these issues for debate, he has also talked on the campaign trail about a "friendlier more welcoming Parliament for individual members to introduce legislation protecting pre-born human rights. That may put Scheer in a similar position as John Tory when the latter was leader of the Ontario Progressive Conservative party and proposed funding for religious schools, a policy that made him very popular with the religious right but cost him the election. Social conservatives were jubilant after Scheer was elected. The influential anti-abortion and anti-euthanasia group Right Now wrote on its Facebook page on Sunday: Thank-you to all our volunteers who worked tirelessly selling memberships and getting out to vote! You made the difference! His agency, Torch Inc. Scheer is also fiercely opposed to carbon pricing, has shown little interest in climate change, and is no fan of the public sector. How much influence the Rebel gang will have with the new Conservative leader remains to be seen. Beyond satisfying his supporters, Scheer toes the hard line himself. This is all pretty harsh stuff, to the right of Harper and arguably even Preston Manning and Stockwell Day. Manning and Day also operated in a different era, before social media had empowered the very groups Scheer has courted. A similar juggling act is proving difficult for Ontario PC leader Patrick Brown, another Harper disciple dealing with social conservatives in his ranks. Only time will tell if Scheer stays with them. Then again, he may have no choice.
