The constant call to admit guilt amounts almost to a tyranny of confession today. We demand tell-all tales in the public dramas of the courtroom, the talk shows, and in print, as well as in the more private spaces of the confessional and the psychoanalyst's office.

Email Copy Link Copied Space: Think about it for a second. A place where you can see as far as your eyes allow. And, as you do so, you see nothing. It can be a scary and daunting experience to be up in space. And astronauts have had their fair share of creepy experiences while up there. However, not everyone who claims to have experienced these phenomena are civilians. You may forget about the unknown and the coldness that invades the astronaut suit once you exit the space shuttle and begin floating in the ocean of space. This list compiles 15 of the most troubling confessions from astronauts. In Space The Apollo 10 mission was extremely important in the history of space exploration. The mission was a practice run for the first mission to the Moon. During this test run, the astronauts were to test out the varying pieces of equipment and technology. This is a dangerous mission to take on, especially since the technology is being tested in a real space environment. As the mission progressed, the astronauts heard some interesting noises come through their headphones. Specifically, the astronauts recount hearing a weird whistling sound that played throughout all their helmets. Logical or not, a whistling sound in your helmet is sure to send chills down your spine. A case in point is the Russian cosmonaut, Vladimir Kovalyonok. The Major General was in space on May 5th, It was something that would change his life forever. According to the account by Kovalyonok, he witnessed an object float a small distance from his spacecraft. It floated, and then let out an explosion. A second explosion quickly followed, and then another object appeared. A brilliant flash of white occurred, and then the objects were gone. And it is still unexplained as to what was floating in the realm of space that could glow bright gold and disappear in a flash. Or, this is what Dr. Story Musgrave claims happened while he was on a voyage in outer space. Musgrave has a multitude of accomplishments in life, so it would be a bit odd if he lied about this. His credibility is outstanding, and his story is equally bizarre as it is fascinating. Musgrave claims that he saw a space snake. It was eight feet long. If this confession is true, then space is definitely a strange place. The thunder is rumbling. The skin on the back of your neck begins to crawl. You apprehensively get up to check out the door. No one is there. This is a scary situation. Now, imagine if this happened to you in space. Chinese astronaut Yang Liwei experienced these same circumstances when he was in orbit in So, what made the noise? Who, or what, was knocking on the space shuttle wall? What was its intentions? The answer may never be known. People normally see strange lights, they may hear strange noises or even see alien beings. However, weird lights are almost always a part of the UFO story. Enter American astronaut Leroy Chiao, who now belongs to the millions of people around the globe who have seen strange lights in the sky. Or, in this case, in space. He was commander of the International Space Station and it was his time to give strong leadership. While leading his crew, he saw some bizarre lights in space. According to Leroy, the lights were arranged in the shape of an upside-down check mark. They also flew right by him, making him question what he just saw. But, this is where the facts end and the conspiracies begin. For instance, some think that Armstrong walked on a movie set that looked like the Moon. With a bevy of conspiracy theories revolving around the Moon landing in , one of the more credible theories centers around Armstrong and what he said when he landed on the moon. According to NASA, their transmission went silent for about two minutes after Neil landed on the Moon due to technological problems. However, many fellow employees say that they heard what he said. He claims that there were two gigantic UFOs that were hovering over the Moon. Armstrong was a credible man, and this theory intrigues all who enjoy the history of space. Both sides were trying to get their people up into space first, and even though the Russians were the first to get people into space, the space exploration for both sides have continued to this day. While most people only have stories of UFOs, this astronaut has concrete proof of the existence of strange phenomena. He captured a cigar-shaped UFO in the vastness of space. With this footage, does this make you a believer?

Indeed, "Troubling Confessions" is a kind of sui generis text on the place of confession in Western Culture, and as such it bears absolutely no resemblance to other and earlier critical treatments of confessional literature.

In lieu of an abstract, here is a brief excerpt of the content: Comparative Literature Studies Speaking Guilt in Law and Literature. University of Chicago Press, By comparing confession in law and literature, and by tracing its history in Western society, Peter Brooks seeks to challenge the value of confession in law and in American culture as a whole. The religious model of confession, according to Brooks, provides the cornerstone of the Western model of the self. More specifically, the requirement of annual confession on the part of the Fourth Lateran Council of helped to consolidate the concept of an interior, private self that was to be regulated, disciplined, and consoled. But when the apparatus of religious and therapeutic confession merge with the needs of the State, as Brooks convincingly argues they do in contemporary American culture, conflicts and contradictions abound. Literature and literary theory reveal the complexities that the law, at best, only partially acknowledges. According to Brooks, confession is "one of the most complex and obscure forms of human speech and behavior. The Miranda decision, which established the warnings familiar to everyone who watches police shows on television--was supposed to guarantee that a defendant could "tell his story without fear" But the safeguards protecting the voluntariness do not hold up, and the relation between the confession and the truth may prove tenuous. Brooks finds evidence in police manuals to show that police interrogators are trained to generate stories for defendants to complete, elaborate, and refine. The interrogator tells a story, and the confessant confirms it. Brooks points out that the interrogation is controlled by the fiction that it is better for a defendant to talk. Brooks finds the phenomenon of recovered memory, and the legal cases against re-discovered abusers as a telling instance of the conflict between therapeutic truth and verifiable legal truth. Furthermore, this truth is the product of a particular relationship, "created by the bond of the confessant and the confessor. Dmitrii, the oldest brother, fond of quoting Schiller and sowing wild oats, is accused of the murder of his father. Dmitrii is reluctant to produce exculpatory evidence--the source of his seemingly new found wealth--because of the stain on his honor. You are not currently authenticated. ### 3: Disturbing Confessions From People Who Stalked Their Crush

Peter Brooks is the author of Henry James Goes to Paris, Realist Vision, Troubling Confessions, Reading for the Plot, The Melodramatic Imagination, and a number of other books, including the historical novel World Elsewhere.

A huge company, making millions of dollars annually and putting on show after show with traveling talent and hundreds of staff, means there are going to be times where not everything is perfect. However, often things are less than perfect. But, how much do we really know about these incidences? The fans want to know what really happened and they count on these behind-the-curtain accounts to keep them in the loop. Below are 15 people who have told their versions of 15 different shocking moments in wrestling history. Whether you decide to take what they say at face value, or you choose to form your own opinion, these former wrestlers and talents had a reason for adding to the conversation. They want you, the fans, to know what really went down. Some of these 15 entries will make re-visiting the incidence an interesting exercise when you have a different perspective. Oh, what might have been Others are sad and troubling when you look at how these incidences could have been avoided. It was wrestling or the mafia and he was concerned the mafia would win. As Mantel tells the story, Bravo tried not to get mixed up in the business, but after having to borrow from his own mother, it was too much to take. Dino started working in an illegal cigarette trafficking circuit and eventually got tied up with a cocaine dealer who wanted a piece of the cigarette business. After a shipment was botched and police called to the scene, Bravo ended up being blamed and was shot in the head 10 times in his home. One of the main knocks on Triple H is that he reserves his own involvement in matches for WrestleMania time and places himself in some of the biggest angles only once a year. Batista has gone on record that he wants to return, but only in a program with Triple H where Batista could say goodbye. Triple H has flat out said no and on more than one occasion. Those opinions are not always very kind. According to Batista, politics are still a major issue in the WWE. Gonzalez pleaded self-defense and was acquitted due to a weak Puerto Rican justice system and a lack of witnesses for Brody. Mantel said he could feel the tension in the air at the arena that night. After he left the dressing room to check out the crowd, Chris Youngblood ran up to yell that someone had stabbed Brody. Mantel went back into the room to see Brody lying on the floor. He says he witnessed the Invader Gonzalez and Victor Jovica screaming at each other in the shower room which appeared an effort by Jovica to stop Gonzalez from leaving. Gonzalez went home, got dressed in a different shirt and came back to the arena as if nothing had happened. Tony Atlas who was also there tried to get the police to take the situation seriously, but because Gonzalez was a star in their country, nobody cared. That CM Punk went on a public tirade after his departure also got a few people hot under the collar. WWE producer and sometimes talent Road Dogg brings a different perspective. This was in the middle of a production meeting. The Montreal Screwjob will go down as one of the most infamous wrestling meets real life situations of all time and for years, Shawn Michaels said he knew nothing about what was going to happen to Bret Hart when Vince McMahon called for the bell and stole the title off Bret before he left for WCW. In fact, not only did he know, he agreed to let McMahon take the heat for it. Years later the whole incident appears to be a bunch of people just making a ton of wrong decisions one after another. That song became iconic with The Sandman character.

4: Troubling Confessions : Peter Brooks :

The Apollo 10 mission was extremely important in the history of space exploration. The mission was a practice run for the first mission to the Moon.

Individuals would rise from their pews and accuse themselves in comfortably imprecise terms of various moral lapses, begging forgiveness of their brethren. At one such Mass, a young woman rose and proclaimed to the piously suppressed excitement of the congregation that she had committed adultery. It betrays the Cartesian bias of much modern Catholicism, the belief that what matters is what goes on in your head. The fact that Brooks is an American is not accidental in this respect, since after Stalinist Russia the US is surely the most neurotically confessional culture in modern history. The belief that whatever is not instantly externalised is inauthentic belongs more to California than Calabria. And though this blend of puritanism and consumerism now increasingly permeates Europe, too, it is still hard for some Europeans to get by in a United States which seems not to value reticence or obliquity. The country is awash with witness, therapy, victimage, public self-exculpations, lowlier-than-thou protestations. One of several troubled passages between the private and the public, the act of confession links the most private "sin, sexuality and the like" to the most dauntingly public law courts, police stations. And this is bound to be of interest in a society like the United States, whose citizens, like people elsewhere only more so, are at once cloistered in their own private space and remorselessly on public show. The connection between these spheres was once known as republicanism or civic humanism: Both puritanism and consumerism make a fetish of transparency; but a little more transparency in Western culture, even so, might not come amiss. For the other side of the phoney immediacy of the chat show is the deception and skulduggery by which some people reap a profit from such spectacles, not to speak of the lying politics which prop up that acquisitive system. While some chatter artlessly away about incest and aliens, others huddle conspiratorially together in smoke-free rooms. The more private lives are conducted in a glasshouse, the more sinisterly inscrutable grows the public realm. For every post-structuralist fastidiously sceptical of truth, there are millions of ordinary folk out there for whom seeing is believing. This, no doubt, is one reason for the success of post-structuralist theory in the United States, well past its sell-by date though it now is. Another reason is the American fetish of personal responsibility. The legal notion of confession depends, as Peter Brooks points out, on the assumption of a free, rational will, so that to cast doubt on the concept is more ideologically subversive in the States than it is in stoical, deterministic, history-ridden Europe. Hence the US origins of Post-Modernism, which overreacts to a hubristic American affirmation of the self by undoing or dissolving it. From disputing wrestlers to bullying, abuse, lying, hatred, racism and mistreatment, there isn't a rule or ethical position people and executives haven't crossed.

On the surface, this might not seem that bad, but when we think about the effort that went into this, it just screams creepy. In order to make her fake Twitter account look legit, she had to get an image of a guy for the profile picture. Have you ever tried manifesting your crush into your life? Apparently, there are classes where you can learn how to bring your crush into your life. It kind of sounds like Voodoo. I have definitely done this. These poor guys really have no idea. Seriously, if these guys only knew what girls were doing to make a connection. His mom even called him the next morning asking him who she was which means that she stayed there all night. Why would she stay there long enough to get caught? We had not even been on a date at that point, but I was convinced that we were meant to be, so I went to Chicago with its terrible winters for two years of grad school when I could have been in southern California to be near him. He must have been deeply disturbed to hear her say that. Did she think she was being sweet? Not only is she creepy, but she has the most ridiculous means of contraception on the planet. Hopefully, he ran away from that one. She needs to get a restraining order on him because there is clearly something wrong with this guy. The present he gave her was a working key to her front door. It turns out, he was a locksmith and had managed to remember the pattern of her house key when she had left them on her desk. She probably started to scream for some help at that point. Facebook actually sends someone a notification when someone else downloads multiple pictures from their page. We were even surprised to hear this. The notification includes the album name, but not specific pictures that were downloaded like it matters at that point. She must have been mortified when her crush found out that she had downloaded his pictures. She probably died of embarrassment, but at least he was safe. This is not a girl you want to hang with.

6: Troubling Confessions: Speaking Guilt in Law and Literature by Peter Brooks

Peter Brooks Troubling Confessions: Speaking Guilt in Law and Literature. University of Chicago Press, pages, $24
Confession is all the rage these days. During one recent week, The New York Times Magazine ran an "Endpaper" about the emotionally blighting effect of a man's failure to admit an.

She was 22 years old at the time, working as an assistant teacher. The youngest of five children in a close-knit family, she was especially tight with her sister, Crystal. Tests show that she has a low verbal IQ, meaning she sometimes has trouble expressing herself and understanding others. Kids would tease her," said Paul Calusinski. Their parents, Paul and Cheryl, say that while Melissa did need extra help at school, she excelled at art. And she blossomed when, as a teen, she began babysitting a family of rambunctious boys. So Melissa jumped at the chance to work at that daycare center with her sister. All of the children were fond of Melissa, says Crystal, including Benjamin Kingan. They would scream and cry," Crystal told Moriarty. And then he kind of falls back asleep," she told Moriarty. He did not wake up at all. Two hours later, Melissa learned Ben was dead. How did he die? It was a mystery. It took an autopsy by pathologist Eupil Choi to come up with an answer. Choi indicated that there was The damage was inside. Choi said there was a skull fracture as well as a large injury in the back of the brain. Police believed whatever happened to Benjamin happened that day at the center. And then my mouth just totally dropped. Crystal Calusinski was finally released after eight hours, but Melissa was still with police: You know percent. We know what happened, but we need you to tell us. Tell us what happened. Investigators read Melissa her rights. But over and over, she denies doing anything to Ben. I had nothing to do with it. But after six hours in that room And he hit the chair. Then, after three more hours, her story gets more sinister: You get mad at him and you throw him on the floor. You threw him on the floor? She is taken to another station for booking and repeats the same terrible story: How hard did you throw him? I went like that throws doll down hard After spending 14 hours with police -- without her parents or a lawyer - Melissa Calusinski is arrested and charged with murdering Benjamin Kingan. Melissa Calusinski [In police car]: The trial began in November Melissa Calusinski says she was optimistic and believed that hard medical evidence would prove she was pressured into making a false confession. They say there was a lot of commotion that day and Melissa was overwhelmed. I was feeling so frustrated But the more Fuller learned, the more she began to question the case against Melissa. Fuller worried about the nine hours it took investigators to get the young woman with a low verbal IQ to confess: You threw him on the ground, he hit the back of his head. And there was this: Melissa told investigators that when she threw Ben to the floor, another teacher was in the same room - at the sink. Those are her own words, OK. And no one ever heard any commotion, any screaming, any crying. No one heard anything," Fuller replied. And If I might just point out about Ben Teacher Nancy Kallinger told police that he slept a lot. He had just gotten up from a 2: He-- it was, like, nonstop," said Melissa. Defense attorneys said these were signs of a brain injury that left him vulnerable to any further impact, even a minor one. And Ben did have a habit of throwing his head back and hitting it. Nancy Kallinger said he did that twice shortly before he died. I put him on the floor and he immediately threw himself on the floor. And I walked towards the sink and he threw himself again. Prosecutors scoffed at the defense theory. They say Ben threw up because he had a stomach bug. He did throw up a couple of times," said Matthew DeMartini. He was given Pedialyte and put to bed. He woke up the next day and he was fine," said DeMartini. And his injuries are consistent with that impact to that floor," said Scheller. They closed their case with a video of Ben pushing a toy shopping cart taken several weeks after he got that bump on his head. Proof, they said, that he was neurologically fine. The jury took seven hours to deliberate. And I was pretty positive about it. They said they reached their verdict. Guilty of first-degree murder, Melissa Calusinski was sentenced to 31 years in state prison. But her father, convinced Melissa was innocent, vowed to fight for her. Thomas Rudd, the new Lake County coroner - who is currently running for re-election -- took a look at the autopsy evidence. So, I had my head spinning," Dr. Rudd told Erin Moriarty. Eupil Choi said Benjamin Kingan did not have an old injury, but his own slides showed that the toddler did. Rudd explained, pointing to the bottom of the scan. Only this should be there. Choi made a glaring error when he said Ben was severely injured on the day he died. And how they let that go is beyond me," Rudd replied. He could have just twisted his head really fast," Rudd explained. It was the old injury. The old injury was massive. Asked if he was nervous about it, Rudd said, "Yes Choi admitted he was wrong. He even signed a sworn affidavit, conceding that, "in my report and testimony I missed that Ben had suffered an old injury LifeAfterTen Zellner says Melissa did not get a fair trial. When confronted with Dr. He also questions that skull fracture Dr. How do you fracture a skull without causing tissue damage to the skin above it? Rudd could only look at photos. And as for that video prosecutors relied on at trial? Choi made a mistake, filed an affidavit, that this was a fair trial? I feel like it was my fault. After all, prosecutors say, Melissa Calusinski herself said she did it. Is this a confession? Show us how hard you threw him on the ground. I went like that. And it takes time to heal. Newspaper reporter Ruth Fuller says this is the most troubling confession she has ever seen. Are you kidding me?"
