Watch your inbox for the latest articles and features. All you need is a camera and an interesting setting. Photographer Katie Sadie proved this when we challenged her to create a DIY photo flip book using nothing but a disposable camera from Lomography. It comes in their purple-tinged Lomochrome film, standard color negative, and also black and white. We went for the color film to add more interest and movement to the flip book. If you do often shoot on 35mm or mm , your analog camera of choice will also work well. Pick your subject matter For her flip book, Toronto-based Sadie selected a car wash with a retro feel as the location. Other good options might be ice cream melting on a hot day; people skiing or tobogganing in the winter; a concert with lots of dancing; your next birthday party. Any setting with some interesting movement will work. It might help to think of a beginning, middle, and end for your flip book. In this case, the car starts out dirty, goes into the car wash, and drives away clean. For her flip book, Sadie shot 83 frames, which used up just under three rolls of film. The result is four GIF-based flip book stories. Shooting more slowly will result in a flip book with jerky motion, whereas shooting faster will lead to a more smooth flip book story. You can pace your shots depending on how you want your finished product to look. Take your negatives to the lab or develop them in your home dark room, or get your digital photos printed out. You might want to get your images printed onto cardstock, for greater ease of page flipping. Regular printer paper would work too, though, and also makes for a low-budget flip book. If you decide to make a GIF flip book, like we did, you can skip this step! You can also use Photoshop to put your flip book together digitally, especially with the help of this step-by-step tutorial , which explains how to create a GIF from a series of moving images. We decided to make a series of four GIFs. If you want to make an IRL flip book, you have a few different options available. A simple option is to punch two holes along the left side of each photo make sure they all line up , and then thread some string, ribbon, or twine through these to tie all the photos together. Stack all your photos together, and attach tape to the top photo, wrapping it all the way around to the last photo. Fill this center piece with glue, and then insert the rest of the photos here. Check out this tutorial for photos of the process and a look at the final result. Take a look at our flip book results below. More analog photography projects:
