It is a good policy to bring an assortment of gifts for your trip. This way, if you are unexpectedly presented with a gift, you will be able to reciprocate. The emphasis in Japanese business culture is on the ritual of gift-giving, rather than the gift itself. For this reason, you may receive a gift that seems too modest, or conversely, extravagant. An expensive gift will not be perceived as a bribe. A wrapped gift is often carried inside a shopping bag to avoid ostentation and minimize any hint that a gift is about to be presented. The best time to present a gift is toward the end of your visit. You can discreetly approach the recipient, indicating that you have a small gift. Avoid giving a gift early in a relationship or at any conspicuous moment. A gift for an individual should be given in private. If you are presenting a gift to a group of people, have all of the intended recipients assembled. Present gifts with both hands. People will also take offense if you are in the presence of a group of people and give a gift to one person, but fail to give one to the others who are present. Also, if several gifts are presented to people of different status, opening them privately prevents any possible comparisons. Before accepting a gift, it is polite to modestly refuse at least once or twice before finally accepting. Ensure that your gifts are wrapped. The safest gift-wrapping choices are pastel-coloured papers, without bows. Avoid wrapping a gift with brightly covered papers or bows. If you are invited to a Japanese home, bring flowers [an uneven number], cakes or candy. If you receive a gift, be sure to reciprocate. Gifts in pairs are considered lucky. APPRECIATED GIFTS imported scotch, cognac, bourbon, brandy or fine wines [top-quality brands only] frozen steaks electronic toys [if children are on your gift-list] cuff links something that reflects the interests and tastes of the recipient a simple commemorative photograph [i. White flowers of any kind should be avoided. There is also a superstition that potted plants encourage sickness. Giving four or nine of anything is considered unlucky. Red Christmas cards should be avoided, since funeral notices are customarily printed in this colour. Japan Business Etiquette - Gift Giving. The flag of Japan.

3: 18 Proofs That Japan Is Full of Surprises

they literally have 3 Japanese girls in their group.. their whole concept is practically akb48 (that's not an insult) they do weird trend things that.

Instead you sign up to become a member and pay monthly. You receive surprise boxes until you cancel. And people do eventually cancel. What I wanted to know was: No computer or even a phone with me. That means that if I do some clever marketing and manage to get new people to join, then after a month 50 of those would be left. After another month, 25 of those would be left and so on. Because of this fall-off, even if you run a subscription business forever, you will not have infinite customers. Instead you reach a steady-state number. In a given month, you will have the new members that you managed to bring in through the door that month. But you will also have people remaining from the previous months. Even if you run the business for a million years, you will still only have members. The two things you can improve are either bringing in more people, or making cancellations less likely. Stand back, I know Python I quickly bicycled home to see what the answer would be, accidentally spreading sand from the beach all over the floor rushing to my computer too quickly. I fired up Python and first checked the previous result. How the member count improves as cancel rate goes down is surprisingly steep. Get the cancel rate to Conclusion Every time your cancel rate halves, your member count doubles. What I hope you take away from this, besides beaches being the best thing about living seaside in rural Japan, is this: Make your customers twice as happy, and you can get away with spending only half as much on marketing.

4: Final Fantasy XV breaks a million copies in Japan, twice as many sales as every other PS4 hit

As unbelievable as it sounds, some Korean netizens didn't realize TWICE's Mina was pretty until now - and they're being attacked by her sudden beauty.

It was their first time visiting Japan and I wanted to write about their impressions of Japan. They were both really impressed with everything that they saw in Tokyo, Kyoto, Hiroshima, Nara and Okayama. Japan has an extremely efficient transportation network. Since we live in California and rely mainly on our cars to go anywhere, my friends were surprised to see such an advanced public transportation system. Trains that arrive and depart on time, clear and quiet rides, a electronic pass system the works on trains, buses, taxis, and even can be used to buy things at the convenience store. Sophisticated customer service Japanese business treats their customers as God. My friends were very surprised with how polite the cashier at the convenient store was. My friends also love hello kitty and sanrio so they were delighted to see all these girly shops. Streets in Japan are so narrow. My American friends and myself were worried because the street was so narrow that we thought that we were going to hit the oncoming car. In America, we have a luxury of driving 3 or 4 lanes on each side of the road so it was a huge cultural shock for them. As broke college students it was a little hard for us to eat out all three meals a day so we tried to just get a few snacks once a day to cut down the costs. Japan is very green My friends arrived at Narita International Airport and on our way from the airport to the hotel, they were impressed with all these mountains and greenery they saw. They thought it was so beautiful but they seem a little overwhelmed with the contrast between the suburb and the crowded Tokyo. Even the ones standing up! Japanese people seem to have an amazing ability to sleep on the train and yet wake up at their exact stop. Earthquakes and Typhoons Unfortunately earthquakes and typhoons are part of life in Japan and foreign tourists often experience both. We were eating at a restaurant and suddenly we felt it start to shake. Japanese children were waiving to my American friends They thought that Japanese children are the cutest thing because when we were walking to Kinkakuji in Kyoto, a group of Japanese elementary school students started to waive at us.. Japanese people slurp noodles We went to traditional ramen restaurant because I wanted my friends to know that Japan has much better ramen than the instant cup noodles sold in America! We were all excited and got seated when they heard this older Japanese man really enjoying his ramen. He was shamelessly slurping the noodles and so I had to explain that in Japan slurping your noodles is a show of how good it tastes. Japanese people are so skinny One of my friend is from the Midwest and at that time she was overweight and both of them realized how petite average Japanese people are. They were really impressed with the equipment, food service and we actually ended up going back there one more time before leaving Japan. Young children taking the train by themselves. It was a little shock for my friends. Even though American culture preaches the importance of being independent, parents are usually very protective of their children. Japan is a relatively safe country so parents feel safe about letting their children be alone, but in America someone would call child protective service if they saw a child taking the subway by themselves. Japanese people trying to practice English One of my friend used to study Japanese so she was able to order food in Japanese but everywhere she went, when she tried to start the conversation in Japanese, she would always get a response in English. So when they talk to a foreigner they usually will try to practice their English. The customer is God for business.

The emphasis is on the act of giving rather than the gift itself. The value of the gift is of less importance than the presentation and thoughtfulness in which it is presented. In Japan, gifts are given on anniversaries, weddings, births, graduations, and housewarmings. Though traditionally gifts are not given for birthdays or Christmas, this is becoming a modern Japan gift giving custom. Gifts or Omiyage souvenirs given to family, friends and co-workers are expected upon returning from a trip. After receiving a gift, the Japanese send a "thank you" gift called an O-kaeshi. These thank you gifts are common for illnesses, funerals, weddings and births. The value of this gift usually equals half the value of the original gift. Business Gift Giving Business gift giving in Japan is more extravagant and prestigious when humility is not the focus. Companies spend large sums of money on gifts to their clients and customers. With businesses gift giving, a sense of competition develops to give the most original or thoughtful gift. Gift giving in Japan is a central part of Japanese business etiquette. Bring a range of gifts for your trip so if you are presented with a gift you will be able to reciprocate. It may be seen as a promotional item and be viewed as cheap. Local food specialties from your region are appreciated. The emphasis in Japanese business culture is on the ritual of gift-giving, rather than the gift itself. For this reason, you may receive a gift that seems too modest, or conversely, extravagant. Expensive gifts are common. An expensive gift will not be perceived as a bribe. It is customary to comment that the gift you are presenting, even if it is extravagant, is "tsumaranai mon" ["an uninteresting or dull thing"]. This statement is meant to convey, "Our relationship is more important than this trivial item. If you are presenting a gift to a group of people, have them all present. The correct Japanese etiquette is to present and receive gifts with both hands. Before accepting a gift it is polite to refuse at least once or twice before accepting. Personal Gift Giving For Weddings, the traditional Japanese gift giving custom is to give money to the couple. Upon returning from their honeymoon, the newly-weds bring back souvenirs to give to their wedding guests. Money should be given in an envelope and the number of bills should be an odd number as superstition suggests that the couple may split if the money can be evenly divided in two. Buddhist Prayer Beads or juzu are often given as a keepsake for this occasion. For her colleagues and other male friends, she gives obligatory chocolate giri choco. For the sick, flowers are the customary gift in Japan, and are the most popular gift to take along to the hospital. Keep in mind when choosing a gift that some flowers and plants are not appropriate to give, such as: Such flowers like Chrysanthemums or the quantity of 4, 9 or 13 are considered bad luck. Potted plants are seen as inappropriate gifts for the sick people because it is believed that the illness will become more severe by taking "deeper root". Major Gift Giving Holidays The two most popular occasions for gift giving in Japan happen twice a year. Ochugen falls during the middle of the year and Oseibo falls at the end of the year. Ochugen originated as an offering to families who had a death in the first half of the year and still takes place two weeks before Obon, the Japanese holiday for honoring the dead. Nowadays, gifts are given as a gesture of gratitude to the people who are close to them. Bosses, colleagues, parents and relatives are common recipients. Oseibo is more widely observed and began from the custom of placing offerings on ancestors graves. Oseibo gifts are typically given to friends, colleagues, teachers, clients or customers, and to anyone he or she is indebted to. These gifts are specifically given to pay back favors received during the year. The recipient can accurately determine the value of the relationship by the monetary value of the gift. Oseibo gifts are typically sent out by the 20th of December. Gifts commonly given for Ochugen and Oseibo range from department store items to food and alcoholic beverages. People receiving gifts for these occasions usually express their gratitude either by writing or calling the person who gave them the gift. Gift Wrapping In Japanese culture, the presentation of the gift is as important as the gift itself. There are many customs and rules specifically related to the wrapping of the gift that play an important part of the gift giving custom. They even go so far as to imply your feelings towards the person receiving the gift. Our Japanese Gift Wrapping guide goes into more detail on this subject. Re-Gifting Postings online suggest that re-gifting is an acceptable practice in Japanese culture. Consider bringing a small souvenir that represents your hometown to give to your host especially food. If the gift is not wrapped, make sure to express lots of appreciation whether you like it or not. Ask some questions about the gift to show your interest. Gifts in pairs are considered lucky. The numbers eight and three are also considered lucky. Eight stands for prosperity and three stands for birth. Money should be given in an envelope. Gifts to Avoid Lilies, lotus blossoms, and camellias are associated with funerals. White flowers of any kind are gifts to be avoided. There is also a superstition that potted plants encourage sickness. Giving four or nine of anything is considered unlucky. This superstition seems to be less important nowadays. Red Christmas cards should be avoided, since funeral notices are customarily printed in this color. Avoid blowing your nose in front of others. Paper tissues should be used. You should not eat while standing up. You should always be seated. Exceptions are made for eating at a counter or eating ice cream. Do not point using fingers, feet or chopsticks. Pointing gestures should be made with waving fingers and the palm of your hand facing downward. In general, you should keep your real opinion hidden to yourself and be polite by offering public opinions tatemaie that are meant to maintain harmony. Avoid interrupting people while talking or when they are getting ready to speak. Business cards should be given and accepted with both hands in formal situations.
