Learn how to keep your vehicle bug-free! As insect remains decompose, they produce enzymes intended to break down the carcass. These enzymes also break down automotive paint, resulting in etching. Etching requires polishing, a topic you can read about in our Dual Action or Circular Polishing Guides. Here in Florida and across most of the Southeast, love bugs are the primary culprit. Love bugs in particular have very fatty bodies, which produce a lot of enzymes. Plus, their sheer number and affinity for busy roads make them unavoidable. And, since they are love bugs, they hit your vehicle two at a time. Love bugs are a major problem in the Southeast. Dozens can coat a bumper in just a couple days. Other Sticky Contaminants Besides bugs, your vehicle regularly encounters tar, tree sap, and bird droppings. All of these things are detrimental to the paint and should be removed ASAP no pun intended! If the spot is relatively fresh, you can use a microfiber towel and a quick detailer to wipe the paint clean. For really stubborn isolated spots, you can use any number of bug and tar removers that are basically strong cleaners intended to dissolve bugs and tar. The drawback to bug and tar removers and cleaners is that you will have to reapply paint protection. However, spray waxes and sealants have made it very quick and easy to spot-wax your car. With most, you just spray, spread, and wipe. Stoner Xenit above is an intense citrus cleaner for stubborn contamination. Stoner Tarminator below works on tough tar deposits. The honeycomb texture gets under the bug remains and lifts them off the paint. To soften the Safe Scrub Bug Sponge, soak it in warm water for 3 minutes. The feathered bristles are gentle yet effective at loosening stubborn grime. The 2-in-1 Wash Mitt is soft sheepskin on one side and bug-removing mesh on the other side. This one mitt is capable of luxurious washing and gentle scrubbing. Yet another bug and tar removal option is detailing clay. Pinnacle Ultra Poly Clay is a fine grade clay designed for maintaining a slick finish. Spray the desired area with clay lubricant and then rub the clay bar back and forth. It will grab the surface at first. As it removes contaminants, the clay will glide more easily. For more info on clay, see our Detailing Clay How-To. Detailing Clay can be used on auto glass, too. Use it exactly the same way as described above. As long as you use plenty of lubricant, detailing clay is perfectly safe on glass and metal. Always reapply wax after using detailing clay. Wax will make future cleaning easier. Therefore, the bugs are easier to remove. Windshield sealants, like Diamondite Shield, will have the same slick effect on the glass. Being non-observant Jews, neither of us, me nor Louie, attached much significance to our birth dates. Just the inconvenience of having our individual celebrations lost in Christmas sales and cardboard mangers. This is sort of an obituary since Louie died, after eighty years on this planet, two weeks ago on Christmas day. On that day I turned thirty. Perhaps I too will die neatly on some future Christmas, my obituary lost in a list of needy cases. Louie was the oldest of eight children. The next to oldest was Anna who left this world almost as innocent as she entered. Retarded, she never got further along in mental age than accompanying great nieces and nephews to Jerry Lewis movies. When my great grandfather died Louie, with my grandmother Hannah, were the family wage earners. My great grandmother had six children to care for at home. Louie got a job as a hat salesman, traveled, made enough money to move the family from the cramped ghetto of the Lower East Side to the broad expanses of Flatbush. My grandmother found a good job as a secretary processing immigrants at Ellis Island. In he died in that same hotel which was his permanent address for fifty years. In he moved in with an Irish woman. Since she was Catholic, marriage was out of the question. Although I never saw this woman I know her name is Virginia. I like to think of Virginia wearing a straw hat with brightly colored plastic flowers, though I understand Louie sold high quality hats. Almost all this information comes from my grandmother who is more accurate than a calendar. My mother was particularly fond of her Uncle Louie. He never returned to New York without a souvenir for my mother or her brother. Never visited without first purchasing some candy or cake as an expected surprise. For those thirty years that business was good he had a bit of ready cash for whomever needed it. He always gave this money with one stipulation: Short, but well-built with a head full of bushy white hair and a florid complexion, Louie looked to me like a dignified Irish pensioner. His light green eyes laughedâ€™! He was someone I, and I suspected the rest of the family, only saw on special occasions. His light green eyes laughed at all of us. Four years ago, at a family reunion, I got into an argument with Louie about God. Louie slapped me on the back and I joined him for a drink. Since , he worked for the New York City Board of Education as a teacher of severely emotionally disturbed children. Mantin lived on the Lower East Side for the last twenty-eight years of his life, and his writing often reflects his multicultural neighborhood.

I was an eight year old little boy and one of my greatest joys was a simple one. When I say this joy was a simple one, I mean simple. How fun was it, as a kid, to receive something in the mail? I had to keep phone calls to my grandparents in Chicago short because "long distance calls" had "high tolls". This was before somebody could "beep in" while you were on the phone. I wonder if some kids reading my posts on Huffington Post even know half the stuff I am talking about?! If they watch the show called "The Goldbergs" they do and no, it has nothing to do with Bill Goldberg, as much as I wish it did. So, where was I? Reminiscing about my childhood It was a futuristic one too. Just the rich kids who had enough money for a camcorder, if they were really lucky, a microwave! In the mid s, that was an exceptional innovation. So I took the remote out of the TV and turned the set on. Took a little while to warm up first though. This was well before it became WWE, and as George The Animal Steele chewed into a turn buckle and wagged his green tongue, my mom told me that I had mail to open! I loved to count everything, just like him. Back then, getting mail was a show stopper for an eight year old kid but still, King Kong Bundy and Big John Stud were not to be missed. So as a young er Guerrilla Monsoon and Bobby Heenan shrieked through my TV speaker, my mom brought me the box that came in the mail and helped me to cut open the tape. I opened that box as fast as I could to see what was inside and guess what it was My mom explained the best part; every 4 weeks I would be receiving another package with more surprises inside! That feeling of getting something in the mail was totally awesome and I swear, I still love getting mail! I think that is part of my addiction to eBay and Amazon. Where else can you order a camouflage bow tie? I was watching a live video stream on my Sprint iPhone 6 Plus while sitting in my backyard using a new app called Periscope. So there I was, sipping Marley Coffee from a lawn chair next to my pool in South Florida when the host on the live stream excitedly explains that he received a "Wrestle Crate" in the mail and was super excited to tear into it and see what was inside. That instantly took my back to that vinyl rocking chair in New York and the feeling of getting mail and wondering what surprises were in it. Like when you are opening baseball cards looking for random inserts. What ever happened to "wax packs" and why did they stop making cell-o packs? Questions for another time and maybe something I can ask Chris Vaccaro at Topps but for now, as difficult as it is for me, I have to stay on track because my flight is about to take off and I want to make sure I meet this deadline! For the next week, I was eight years old again, checking the mailbox and my front porch every day for that box.
