The life on the farm centered on work, family and church -- the Congregational church. Each winter, Sam would return to Newburyport loaded with country farm produce, which he would swap for the dry goods and products that he needed. As you might imagine, on the cold February day when he arrived with a loaded sleigh, the family burst into activity to celebrate his visit and catch up on what was new. One year, however, Sam brought news that shocked his Newburyport kin. He had become a Methodist, and he set the family into an uproar. Emery wrote about the event in her book, Reminiscences of a Nonagenarian, a lively accounting of the events and milestones of her life. He was invited to prolong his sojourn; Uncle Sam and many others became converted, and a church was formed. The preacher had then gone to new spheres of labor, but Uncle Sam and others conducted a regular Sunday worship at the school house. Smith had a remarkable voice and an exquisite ear and taste, and his singing was superb, I was enchanted by it. Mother liked the hymn, but father shook his head and gravely declared his sorrow: He had got over dancing and poetry, now it was preaching, praying and singing. He never was cut out for a drudging farmer, and he never would be one; he only hoped he would not let that farm he had got under such headway go all to rack and ruin. This good woman was positively aghast: Something must be done; she could not have any such doings. Why, it was a disgrace to the family, and would bring ruin to himself! He had become of some account in that far-away place; he should not subject himself and his friends to ignominy, and mar his bright prospects. Methodists, why they were ranters, gathered from the lower classes! Her son had nothing to do with such people. And the sweet, mild little woman put on all the assumption of authority that she could possibly assume, and in the most solemn manner pronounced her ban upon this new spiritual scheme. The intelligence of his embracing Methodism, caused no small stir amongst his relatives and acquaintances, and every evening our house was thronged. Some came to hear of the new doctrines from mere curiosity, others from a desire for knowledge, and a few earnestly to combat what they deemed a serious error, affecting both the temporal and spiritual welfare of the convert. Amongst the most forward and zealous of this class, was Aunt Ruth Little. It was vastly amusing to listen to the war of words, and, it must be confessed, Uncle Sam proved more than a match for the contestants.
