European unemployment insurance Each Member State of the European Union has its own system and in general a worker should claim unemployment benefits in the country where they last worked. For a person working in a country other than their country of residency a cross-border worker , they will have to claim benefits in their country of residence. Additionally, there are non-union unemployment funds. The former requires a degree and two years of full-time work. The latter requires participation in training, education, or other employment support, which may be mandated on pain of losing the benefit, but may be paid after the regular benefits have been either maxed out or not available. In order to be considered unemployed, the seeker must register at the TE-keskus as unemployed. If the jobseeker does not have degree, the agency can require the jobseeker to apply to a school. If the individual does not qualify for any unemployment benefit he may still be eligible for the housing benefit asumistuki from Kela and municipal social welfare provisions toimeentulotuki. They are not unemployment benefits and depend on household income, but they have in practice become the basic income of many long-term unemployed. Unemployment benefits in France France uses a quasi Ghent system , under which unemployment benefits are distributed by an independent agency UNEDIC in which unions and Employer organisations are equally represented. Employers pay a contribution on top of the pre-tax income of their employees, which together with the employee contribution, fund the scheme. The maximum unemployment benefit is as of March In claimants received the allowance for an average days. Germany has two different types of unemployment benefits. Unemployment benefit I[edit] The unemployment benefit I in Germany is also known as the unemployment insurance. The insurance is administered by the federal employment agency and funded by employee and employer contributions. Participation and thus contributions are generally mandatory for both employee and employer. Since , certain previously excluded workers have been able to opt into the system on a voluntary basis. The system is financed by contributions from employees and employers. The contribution level was reduced from 3. Contributions are paid only on earnings up to the social security ceiling The system is largely self-financed but also receives a subsidy from the state to run the Jobcenters. Unemployed workers are entitled to: Living allowance known as unemployment benefit Help in finding work Training Unemployed benefit is paid to workers who have contributed at least during 12 months preceding their loss of a job. The allowance is paid for half of the period that the worker has contributed. The maximum benefit is therefore Euros in In the federal Work Agency had revenues and expenses of For those under the age of 50 who have not been employed for more than 30 months in a job which paid into the social security scheme, full unemployment benefit can be received for a maximum period of 12 months. Note how the duration of eligibility is variegated in Germany to account for the difficulty older people have re-entering the job market. Unemployment benefit II[edit] Main article: Hartz concept If a worker is not eligible for the full unemployment benefits or after receiving the full unemployment benefit for the maximum of 12 months, he is able to apply for benefits from the so-called Arbeitslosengeld II Hartz IV programme, an open-ended welfare programme which ensures people do not fall into penury. A person receiving Hartz IV benefits is paid EUR a month for living expenses plus the cost of adequate housing including heating and health care. Couples can receive benefits for each partner including their children. Additionally, children can get "benefits for education and participation". People who receive Hartz 4 are obligated to seek for jobs and can be forced to take part in social programs or Mini jobs in order to receive this Hartz 4 money. Most of these programs and Mini jobs oblige the employee to work the same hours as a normal full-time job each day, 5 days a week. The self-employed do not qualify, and neither do those with other sources of income. Eligibility since 1 January , has been further constrained in that one applying for unemployment benefits for a second or more time, must not have received more than the equivalent of days of such benefits during the last four years since the last time one had started receiving such benefits; if one has received unemployment benefits in this period for more than days then there is no eligibility while if one has received less, then one is only eligible for at most the remaining days up until the maximum of days is reached. When receiving benefits an individual cannot be earning money from a self-employed profession. If the income increases the fixed amount, a tax authority must issue a certificate that explains that the individual has "interrupted the exercise of the profession", which must be done within 15 days. In order to receive a grant the individual must not be receiving an income from the previous liberal profession. Under the European Commission , liberal professions are professions that require specialized training and that are regulated by "national governments or professional bodies". After the expiration of the month period an application towards long-term unemployment benefits must be submitted in the first 2 months. Long-term unemployment can only be granted if the individual can be found registered under the OAED unemployment registrar. In the most recent financial quarter, In Section 1, Articles grant trade unions the right to organize and negotiate with employers over fair wages for its members as well as representation for their members in the event of workplace conflicts. Basic unemployment benefits can cover both wage-earning and self-employing individuals for the first half-month 10 days after they lose their job, whereas income-linked benefits can cover wage-earning and self-employing individuals for up to three months based on a set salary index and length of employment. Both are paid by the Department of Social Protection and are nicknamed "the dole". Unemployment benefit in Ireland can be claimed indefinitely for as long as the individual remains unemployed. Payments can be increased if the unemployed has dependents. There are more benefits available to unemployed people, usually on a special or specific basis. This condition does not apply to Jobseekers Benefit which is based on Social Insurance payments. More information on each benefit can be found here:

Texas unemployment insurance is a state program that provides financial assistance for Texans that have been temporarily displaced from the workforce. Unemployment benefits are granted once each week for no more than 26 weeks for a claim. To be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits in Texas, the petitioner must be able and available to work full-time, among other eligibility requirements. If granted EDD unemployment coverage, the claimant will receive a weekly benefit that is determined by his or her wages before becoming unemployed. The unemployment claim must be certified by the claimant every 2 weeks in order to receive payment. In special circumstances, the applicant may be required to complete the application over the phone. In any case, the petitioner will need to have information about their last employer including the wages and hours worked. Unemployment insurance applications will be processed in about 4 weeks. After unemployment insurance is granted, the claimant is responsible for keeping a detailed log of his or her job search. To receive unemployment benefits each week on a timely basis, searching for reemployment is mandatory. Failure to meet job search requirements will result in delay or denial of payment. Unemployment insurance benefits in Texas are not granted to every applicant. Once it is determined that an applicant is not eligible for unemployment insurance, the applicant reserves the right to file an appeal. Unemployment insurance coverage may be extended when state unemployment is at an unusual high. Depending on the economic climate, an unemployment extension can add up to 67 additional weeks of benefits. However, weekly benefit amounts will likely decrease every few weeks. There is currently no extended unemployment insurance coverage available in Texas, though it may become available in the future. To retain eligibility for EDD in Texas, the applicant also must meet continuing eligibility requirements. To be eligible to file for an unemployment claim in TX, the petitioner must be unemployed in the state of Texas. Both methods have functionalities that allow the petitioner to review the application at will until a decision has been made. During the unemployment EDD application, the petitioner will also get to choose the method of payment that benefits are given each week. Every 2 weeks, the claimant will be required to certify for benefits in order to receive them. Certification of an unemployment benefits claim may be done online or over the phone. After the application for an unemployment benefits claim is completed, the claimant will receive a weekly payment of benefits. The weekly benefit amount that the claimant is entitled to is subject to changes if the claimant does not meet continuing eligibility requirements. Benefits are granted to beneficiaries for up to 26 weeks, with the exception of times when the unemployment rises above 6 percent. When the state or national unemployment reaches an unusual high, an unemployment benefits extension may be granted. There may be several reasons why an applicant has his or her unemployment benefits denied, some of the most common being: Continued eligibility under both state and federal unemployment extension programs have stricter guidelines than necessary for the initial claim. There are currently no unemployment extensions available in the state of Texas. However, unemployment benefits claimants will be notified of an unemployment compensation extension as they become available in the future. What Is Texas Unemployment Insurance?
