In this six-session video Bible study Lysa helps women to explore the roots of rejection; the lies we believe as a result; and the truth about who God is, who we are, and what it looks like to live loved.

I generally think that Terkheurst is a good writer, but this book really fell flat for me, I think for a few reasons. This was not a great time in my life to read this book. I was trying to remember my own past rejections as I read, and trying to evaluate whether the book would have been helpful to me in those times when I was feeling rejected in the past, or when I face it again in the future I felt like she was trying to be too broad with the subject of this book. There are different types of rejection, and I felt like she lumped them all together and tried to address them all at once. I think we would have been better served as readers if she broke it down a little more clearly. I probably should have just known she was going to try to tackle all this from the subtitle of the book, but I went into this book thinking the topic was "rejection" because I heard Terkheurst speak about it before I picked it up. However, I kept losing track of what we were even talking about, and I had to remind myself that "Oh yeah, this book is about rejection". As a reader, I find it annoying when I keep having to remind myself what the author is talking about. It felt all-over-the-place to me, and I felt she was really stretching trying to make some of these topics fit under the umbrella of "rejection". I was frustrated at how she used Scripture in some places in this book. But there were a few places where I just thought "huh? She included a quote that referenced the story of Joseph and the famine in the Bible - and the quote implied that there was abundance in all the world before this not true - there were at least a couple famines before Joseph - Genesis While I like the idea of applying Scripture when we are feeling rejected, it was a stretch to use that story to illustrate her point. The passage is talking about temptation, not rejection. Another example is when she is using the olive tree as an illustration in Chapter 15, talking about being "crushed" and how God can use that to bring about good in our lives - but then she includes 2 Corinthians 4: The whole thing was self-contradictory. The Bible is our revelation from God and the only writing that is "divinely inspired". Too much "romantic" spiritual language. This is a personal pet peeve, but I get tired of the romantic analogies of our relationship with Jesus. Jesus is our God, not our boyfriend. To reduce our speech about him to romantic terms takes away some of the power of the fact that we are loved and valued by the Creator of the Universe. Overall, I know what she was trying to do in this book, but it felt like "too much bread, not enough butter" - ie. She lost some of my trust with point 3. I received a copy of this book for free in exchange for a review. This is my honest opinion.
