Before occupation[ edit ] Between 3 September , when the United Kingdom declared war against Germany, and 9 May , little changed in the Channel Islands. Conscription did not exist, but a number of people travelled to Britain to join up as volunteers. The horticulture and tourist trades continued as normal; the British government relaxed restrictions on travel between the UK and the Channel Islands in March , enabling tourists from the UK to take morale-boosting holidays in traditional island resorts. Let no one be mistaken; it is not mere territorial conquest that our enemies are seeking. It is the overthrow, complete and final, of this Empire and of everything for which it stands, and after that the conquest of the world. And if their will prevails they will bring to its accomplishment all the hatred and cruelty which they have already displayed. Thus despite the reluctance of Prime Minister Winston Churchill , the British government gave up the oldest possession of the Crown "without firing a single shot. The "Channel Islands had been demilitarised and declared Guernsey was too far away to help at such short notice. Four yachts set off immediately, with 14 others being made ready within 24 hours. The first yachts arrived in Saint-Malo on the morning of 17 June and embarked troops from shore to waiting transport ships; the remaining yachts from Jersey arrived on 18 June and helped clear the last parties from land. The last troops left the islands on 20 June, departing so quickly that bedding and half-consumed meals were left in Castle Cornet. Four-fifths of the children and altogether almost half the population of Guernsey were transported to England so that scarcely a family was undivided. With no planning and secrecy being maintained, communications between the island governments and the UK took place in an atmosphere of confusion and misinterpretation. Opinion was divided and chaos ensued with different policies adopted by the different islands. The British government concluded its best policy was to make available as many ships as possible so that islanders had the option to leave if they wanted to. The authorities in Alderney , having no direct communication with the UK, recommended that all islanders evacuate, and all but a handful did so. The Dame of Sark , Sibyl Hathaway , encouraged everyone to stay. The message in Guernsey was changed to an anti-evacuation one, in total, 5, school children and 12, adults out of 42, were evacuated. In Jersey, where children were on holiday to help with the potato crop, 23, civilians registered to leave; however the majority of islanders, [10]: Nearby Cherbourg was already occupied by German forces before official evacuation boats started leaving on 20 June; the last official one left on 23 June, [11] though mail boats and cargo ships continued to call at the islands until 28 June. A group of girls evacuated from the Channel Islands to Marple in Cheshire try on clothes and shoes which have been donated by the United States. Most evacuated children were separated from their parents, some evacuated children were assisted financially by the "Foster Parent Plan for Children Affected by War" where each child was sponsored by a wealthy American. One girl, Paulette, was sponsored by first lady Eleanor Roosevelt. The Lieutenant Governor of Jersey discussed with the Bailiff of Jersey the matter of being required to carry on administration under German orders. The Bailiff considered that this would be contrary to his oath of allegiance, but he was instructed otherwise. The withdrawal of the Lieutenant Governors on 21 June and the cutting of contact with the Privy Council prevented Royal Assent being given to laws passed by the legislatures, [14] The Bailiffs took over the civil, but not the military, functions of the Lieutenant Governors. Since the legislatures met in public session, the creation of smaller executive bodies that could meet behind closed doors enabled freer discussion of matters such as how far to comply with German orders. The presidents along with the Crown Officers made up the Superior Council under the presidency of the year-old Bailiff, Capt. Reconnaissance flights were inconclusive. On 28 June , they sent a squadron of bombers over the islands and bombed the harbours of Guernsey and Jersey. Peter Port , the main town of Guernsey, some lorries lined up to load tomatoes for export to England were mistaken by the reconnaissance flights for troop carriers. A similar attack occurred in Jersey where nine died. In total, 44 islanders were killed in the raids. The BBC broadcast a belated message that the islands had been declared "open towns" and later in the day reported the German bombing of the island. He reported his brief landing to Luftflotte 3 which came to the decision that the islands were not defended. A platoon of Luftwaffe airmen was flown that evening to Guernsey by Junkers transport planes. There are no armed forces of any description. The bearer has been instructed to hand this communication to you. He does not understand the German language. They went by police car to the Royal Hotel where they were joined by the bailiff, the president of the controlling committee, and other officials. Lanz announced through an interpreter that Guernsey was now under German occupation. Alderney, where only a handful of islanders remained, was occupied on 2 July and a small detachment travelled from Guernsey to Sark, which surrendered on 4 July. The first shipborne German troops consisting of two anti-aircraft units, arrived in St. They brought in infantry, established communications and anti-aircraft defences, established an air service with occupied mainland France, and rounded up British servicemen on leave. Administration[ edit ] Orders of the Commandant of the German Forces in Occupation of the Island of Jersey, 2 July The Germans organised their administration as part of the department of Manche , administered as part of military government Area A based in St. Feldkommandantur was set up in Jersey, with a Nebenstelle in Guernsey also covering Sark , an Aussenstelle in Alderney, and a logistics Zufuhrstelle in Granville. The civil courts would continue in operation, but German military courts would try breaches of German law. At first the bailiffs submitted legislation for the assent of the kommandant signed in their capacities as lieutenant governors. At the end of , the kommandant objected to this style and subsequent legislation was submitted simply signed as bailiff. German military forces used the scrip for payment of goods and services. Locals employed by Germans were also paid in the Occupation Reichsmarks. The Germans allowed entertainment to continue including cinemas and theatre; their military bands performed in public. In , the popular German film actress Lil Dagover arrived to entertain German troops in Jersey and Guernsey with a theatre tour to boost morale. This meant preserving life until such time as the world became dominated by Nazi Germany or the islands were liberated. Mistakes were made as there were no guidelines on how a government should act when occupied. Austria was annexed while Czechoslovakia and Poland were invaded and direct German military governments were installed. Denmark installed a protectorate government and stayed in power taking a passive and pro-German view by accepting a nonaggression pact. France was split in two with their government keeping control of the southern zone. The Channel Islands decided their actions independently of each other and came to very similar passive views, which enabled the existing civil and legal structures to remain in place. The view of the majority of islanders about active resistance to German rule was probably expressed by John Lewis, a medical doctor in Jersey. More important still, there would be instant repercussions on the civilian population who were very vulnerable to all sorts of reprisals. Language such as the title of one chapter, "Resistance? They did not commit suicide, and they did not kill any Germans. Instead they settled down, with few overt signs of resistance, to a hard, dull but relatively peaceful five years of occupation, in which more than half the population was working for the Germans. It is not that they made some mistakes that is surprising, but that they did so much right in circumstances of the greatest possibly difficulty. Civilian life under the German occupation of the Channel Islands Life as a civilian during the occupation came as a shock. Having their own governments continuing to govern them softened the blow and kept most civilians at a distance from their oppressors. Many lost their jobs when businesses closed down and it was hard to find work with non-German employers. As the war progressed, life became harsher and morale fell, especially when radios were confiscated and then when deportations took place in September Food, fuel, and medicines became scarce and crime increased. Following 6 June , liberation became more likely in the popular mind, but the hardest times for the civilians was still to come. The winter of was very cold and hungry, many of the population being saved from starvation by the arrival of Red Cross parcels. Resistance in the German-occupied Channel Islands Plaque: Prison, Gloucester Street, which stood on this site. Others were deported and held in camps in Germany and elsewhere from which some did not return. Eddie Chapman , an Englishman, was in prison for burglary in Jersey when the invasion occurred, and offered to work for the Germans as a spy under the code name Fritz, and later became a British double agent under the code name ZigZag. During the German occupation of Jersey , a stonemason repairing the paving of the Royal Square incorporated a V for victory under the noses of the occupiers. This was later amended to refer to the Red Cross ship Vega. The addition of the date and a more recent frame has transformed it into a monument. Resistance involved passive resistance, acts of minor sabotage, sheltering and aiding escaped slave workers, and publishing underground newspapers containing news from BBC radio. There was no armed resistance movement in the Channel Islands. Much of the population of military age had already joined the British or French armed forces. Because of the small size of the islands, most resistance involved individuals risking their lives to save someone else. Many islanders were willing to go along with the necessities of occupation as long as they felt the Germans were behaving in a correct and legal way. Two events particularly jolted many islanders out of this passive attitude: Audrain drowned, and Hassall and Gould were imprisoned in Germany, where Gould died. A total of islanders, such as Peter Crill, escaped from the islands to England or France: Louisa Gould hid a wireless set and sheltered an escaped Soviet prisoner. Betrayed by an informer at the end of , she was arrested and sentenced on 22 June. In she was posthumously awarded the honour British Hero of the Holocaust. Listening to BBC radio had been banned in the first few weeks of the occupation and then surprisingly given the policy elsewhere in Nazi-occupied Europe tolerated for a time before being once again prohibited. In the ban became draconian, with all radio listening even to German stations being banned by the occupiers, a ban backed up by the confiscation of wireless sets. Denied access to BBC broadcasts, the populations of the islands felt increased resentment against the Germans and increasingly sought to undermine the rules. Hidden radio receivers and underground news distribution networks spread. Nevertheless, many islanders successfully hid their radios or replaced them with home-made crystal sets and continued listening to the BBC despite the risk of being discovered by the Germans or being informed on by neighbours. The 6d note was designed by Blampied in such a way that the word six on the reverse incorporated an outsized "X" so that when the note was folded, the result was the resistance symbol "V" for victory. As a sign of resistance, he incorporated into the design for the 3d stamp the script initials GR for Georgius Rex on either side of the "3" to display loyalty to King George VI. The German authorities buried them with full military honours.

That autumn various tests, consisting of continuous music, were made on metres. The station restarted just before Christmas as Radio but soon became Radio Caroline with a Top 40 format. In late , Radio Caroline had money problems. Later that day, the Dutch Royal Navy returned the crew and fighting broke out on board. Two days later, Mi Amigo was towed to IJmuiden and seized because of unpaid bills. The ship was further delayed by hull damage and repaired before writs could be issued. Because of a law that allows pirates in distress to come ashore without arrest, the running aground had no consequences for the crew. Two aerials and twin transmitters were used for about six weeks until the aerial mast failed. To accommodate the second aerial, a second short mast, just in front of the bridge, was employed as the other end for the main mast. This service was Radio Seagull and broadcast live during the evening. Rough weather sometimes prevented tapes from arriving and old programmes had to be repeated. For the first years, advertising on the station was in demand. Some DJs were embarrassed but some were fascinated by the challenge of an abstract concept. Disc jockey Tony Allan developed a following, combining Loving Awareness with a professional style, humanity, knowledge of music and rich radio voice. Radio Caroline continued, moving its headquarters and servicing operation to Spain. After 31 August, shows for Radio Mi Amigo were delivered on cassettes rather than reel-to-reel tapes. The tapes were picked up in Belgium at a bus stop, taken to a small sports plane and dropped in the sea close to the radio ship. The Mi Amigo "Top 50" tapes were flown over by helicopter to get them on board more quickly. On 1 September, a small motor launch had difficulties in rough seas. A coastguard vessel escorted the launch back to shore, but the authorities were unhappy that Caroline listeners had jammed the emergency switchboards. Tenders and boat owners were warned, and some were prosecuted for ferrying staff and provisions to the ship. Belgian courts sentenced Tack and some DJs to fines and jail in absentia , although the prison terms were later cancelled. Wavelength changes[ edit ] The two stations experimented with different frequencies. Radio Caroline had greater night-time interference, and it was decided to move Caroline to a new frequency. On 3 March , Caroline closed, announcing that it would return six days later on metres. This gave reasonable reception by day but strong heterodyne interference at night because the transmitter crystal was off-channel. On 20 October , technical and financial problems put the Mi Amigo off the air. Unhappy at the loss of advertising, Radio Mi Amigo terminated its contract with Caroline in November and broadcast from its own ship, the MV Magdalena later that year, but this was short-lived. On 19 January , the ageing ship took in water and a lifeboat was called to rescue the crew members. Mi Amigo sinks[ edit ] Main article: It began taking in water and the crew was rescued by lifeboat. Obviously, we hope to be back with you as soon as possible, but just for the moment we would like to say goodbye. For the moment from all of us, goodbye and God bless. Having to manoeuvre the lifeboat alongside the stricken vessel 13 times in high seas and a north-easterly gale earned Coxswain Charles Bowry an RNLi silver medal. Each of his crew was awarded The Thanks of the Institution on vellum. MV Ross Revenge[ edit ].

4: Construction of Rockefeller Center - Wikipedia

Site[ edit ] Map of Rockefeller Center. The subway station is 47th&50th Streets&Rockefeller Center. In , much of Manhattan, including the future Rockefeller Center site, was established as a "common land" of the city of New York. At the time, the land was sparsely occupied and consisted mostly of forest. Nicholas Church to pay for construction. By , there were brownstones on every one of the plots in the Upper Estate, which were all owned by Columbia. Fulton Cutting , the wealthy and influential Cooper Union president, were unsuccessful. Lee later informed his boss, John D. As a result, in August , Rockefeller contacted several firms for advice. Todd , to serve as the principal builder and managing agent for the project. Rockefeller was afraid that many of the landmarks of his childhood, located in the area, were going to be demolished by the s wave of development. Medary to judge the proposals. They worked under the umbrella of "Associated Architects" so none of the buildings could be attributed to any specific firm. Andrew Reinhard and Henry Hofmeister as rental or tenant architects, to design the floor plans for the complex, [73] [74] and who were known as the most pragmatic of the Associated Architects. Since the Met would not have any funds until after they sold their existing building by April, Heydt suggested that the Metropolitan Square Corporation buy the leases instead, in case the Met ultimately did not have money to relocate. They wanted to sell their existing facility and move into the proposed new opera house by , which meant that all existing leases would need to be resolved by May Otherwise, the new opera house could not be mortgaged, and Columbia would regain possession of the land, which would be a disadvantage for both the Met and Rockefeller. The complex would contain the Metropolitan Opera facility; a retail area with two story buildings; department stores; two apartment buildings; and two hotels, with one rising 37 stories and the other being 35 stories. According to one New York Times account, the shops in the Metropolitan Opera development would be laid out in a way similar to that of the retail center in the English city of Chester. Young , who was amenable to the suggestion. One was to abandon the entire development. The other to go forward with it in the definite knowledge that I myself would have to build it and finance it alone. The RCA founder was enthusiastic about the project, expressing his vision for a complex that, according to Daniel Okrent, contained "an opera house, a concert hall, a Shakespeare theater&and both broadcast studios and office space for RCA and its affiliated companies". Like the previous Metropolitan Opera proposal, this plan subdivided the complex into eight blocks with a plaza in the middle of the center block. It was similar to his October plan for the Met, with one major change: The delivery lane was eliminated in this plan, as it was perceived as unnecessary: Additional details were released: Ecker granted the money on two conditions: One plan entailed the construction of a massive pyramid spanning all three blocks; this was later downsized to a small retail pyramid, which evolved into the oval retail building. This suggestion was not considered further because, as with the diagonal-streets plan, it would have involved decommissioning streets. Hood created a guideline that all of the office space in the complex would be no more than 27 feet 8. At the time, air-conditioned office buildings were rare, and the sunlit offices provided comfortable accommodations, as opposed to offices in many older buildings, which were dark and cramped. A RKO-operated sound theater would be located in the southernmost block between 48th and 49th streets. The complex would also include space for a future Metropolitan Opera venue on the northernmost block. The rendering was much criticized, with some taking issue with details or general dimensions of the as-yet-unconfirmed proposal, and others lambasting the location of the tall skyscrapers around the plaza. The renowned architectural scholar Lewis Mumford went into exile in upstate New York specifically because the "weakly conceived, reckless, romantic chaos" of the plans for Rockefeller Center had violated his sense of style. A wide, planted esplanade , between 50th and 51st streets, would lead pedestrians from Fifth Avenue, on the east, to the plaza and to the RCA Building to the west, with steps leading down to the plaza. The western side of the plaza would lead directly to the underground pedestrian mall. The two new retail buildings, connected to each other, and to the main tower, with a galleria , were proposed to serve Italian, and possibly also German, interests upon completion.
